Treasury Acts to Calm World Markets' Fear Of a New Dollar Value

Denies Plan Considered to Restore Old Value of Dollar's Base.

Voices Confidence Of Court Approval

Further Devaluation of Currency Urged by 5 Farm Groups.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

As apprehension over the outcome of the gold-clause cases pending in the Supreme Court caused wide price fluctuations in the major world markets, Administration quarters yesterday informally and quietly undertook to relieve the nervous tension which unexpectedly seized speculative centers.

Treasury attaches hastened to repudiate an impression which had been broadcast that serious consideration was being given in that quarter to a return to the old gold dollar value should the Supreme Court rule that issuers of gold-clause obligations must pay each $1 of indebtedness with $1.69.

Informally it was stated at the Treasury that none in authority there had given any serious thought to restoring 23.22 grains of gold to the dollar. It was pointed out that such action would require congressional consent—which might be most difficult to obtain in the face of a militant inflation bloc once again going into action.

Goal of Groups.

Demands for further devaluation of the gold dollar and establishment of the commodity dollar were carried to President Roosevelt yesterday from five farm organizations. The latter, along with other organizations seeking a "cheaper dollar" and members of the inflation bloc in Congress, will meet this morning to discuss and formulate their plans for this session of Congress.

The goal of these groups is to have Congress take further steps toward currency inflation. At the same time they are determined to resist bitterly any turning back from the program so far enacted into law. Furthermore there has been nothing to indicate that the President favors retreating from his program, even though he has been represented as disappointed over the progress made in lifting price levels.

Confident of Approval.

But aside from that aspect of the matter, it was pointed out, the Treasury authorities are in full accord with the Government's stand in the gold-clause cases and are entirely confident that the Supreme Court will uphold the abrogation of the gold clause in both public and private contracts without liability to bond issuers.

Despite the anxiety over the outcome of the gold-clause cases apparent in other cities and abroad, there was unanimity of belief in high places here that the court would not overthrow the gold-clause legislation or otherwise condemn the Administration's monetary policies.

Decision Date Unknown.

Meanwhile the Supreme Court continued to hear arguments in cases much less important than the gold clause suits, giving no indication of its decision in the latter or when the ruling might be expected. The court will do everything to expedite the ruling, it is believed, yet in some quarters it was not expected for about three weeks.

The commodity and money markets of the world, however, appeared inclined to discount in advance the effect of any ruling adverse to the Government. Over night a report was circulated that Federal experts had reached the opinion that if the court rules against the Government's contention

Soviet Leaders Facing Exile

Kameneff and Zinovieff Now Undergoing Trial at Leningrad.

Moscow, Jan. 15 (AP).—The Soviet revealed tonight that Lev Kameneff and Gregory Zinovieff, formerly powerful Communist leaders, went on trial for alleged counterrevolutionary activities at Leningrad yesterday before the military collegium of the supreme court.

With other asserted counterrevolutionists, Kameneff and Zinovieff were linked with the alleged secret terroristic group charged with plotting the assassination of Sergei Kirov, Communist leader, at Leningrad, December 1.

They were ordered to trial, it was announced, because new evidence had been received since Kameneff and Zinovieff were sent before the special council of the peoples commissariat of domestic affairs which, it was indicated, would order their exile.

Evidence available at that time, it was announced, did not justify their trial on charges of terrorism.

Townsend Pension Bill to Make Debut Before House Tomorrow

'$200 Monthly for All' Plan to Be Guided by McGroarty.

By Elliott Thurston.

A gray little man, now 72, with a religious zeal in his eyes, means to introduce in the House tomorrow a bill to give more than half of the national income to less than 10 per cent of the population in old-age pensions. He is John Steven McGroarty, newly elected Congressman from California. His plan is of course, the incredible Townsend scheme to give a pension of $200 a month to every person 60 years old or more.

He would have the Treasury donate an initial $2,000,000,000 to his fund. That would suffice for exactly one month. Then he would put a sales tax of 2 per cent—more or less, as occasion demanded—upon every transaction. By his theory this would net $24,000,000,000 a year—the sum needed to pay the pensions. The entire national income last year was less than twice this amount.

In other words, this is the truly sensational scheme springing from the brain of an obscure country doctor—Dr. F. E. Townsend, who lives in the Congressman's district, has known him for years and first unfolded the idea to him. The Congressman, once a newspaper man, wrote an article about it in a Los Angeles newspaper. Since then the idea has spread like magic. Its protagonists, like the Congressman, have the air and tone of religious revivalists.

Larger AAA Plans Studied By President

Confers Also on Program to Increase Shipment of Cotton Abroad.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Extension of the AAA and a new plan to dispose of cotton abroad were considered by President Roosevelt yesterday in a series of White House conferences that brought together officials of the State, Treasury and Agriculture Departments.

He received from members of the National Agricultural Conference, an organization formed by the major farm groups, a list of proposed amendments to the AAA which would strengthen the hand of Secretary Wallace over farm production.

And, in a meeting with Secretaries Hull, Morgenthau and Wallace, he went over means to improve the status of cotton. Details were closely guarded, but it was presumed the new plans concern some deal with a foreign nation or a financing arrangement to facilitate shipments abroad.

Farm Plans Indorsed.

The farm leaders, headed by Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, submitted a broad program which indorsed generally what has been done to lift farm income and urged an "intensification of present efforts" in the same direction.

Receiving the delegation in his oval office, Mr. Roosevelt read the program, point by point, and indorsed many of the steps outlined, it was learned. Changes in the AAA put forth by the farm con-

Throngs Cheer As Key State Inducts Earle

First Democrat Governor in 40 Years Takes Pennsylvania Oath.

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 15 (U.P.).—Climaxing 40 years of unsuccessful Democratic campaigns in this traditionally Republican stronghold, George H. Earle took the oath of office today as Governor of Pennsylvania, one of the last States to assimilate President Roosevelt's "New Deal."

A record crowd, disregarding freezing temperatures, witnessed the ceremonies by which he became the States thirtieth chief executive.

As the sixth Democrat to take office over a period of one century, Earle pledged his administration to match the pace set by the President and to lead the Commonwealth to "new economic and political frontiers."

Spectacular Ceremony.

To the thousands who shared the glory of his triumph, Earle drove home the message that the results he will endeavor to achieve must be gained by hard work, efficiency and unselfishness.

His warning that the spirit of "America in its pioneer days" is required to deal with the problems ahead, contrasted vividly with the pomp and splendor of the most spectacular inauguration the commonwealth has seen in decades.

Among the witnesses was a special delegation from Congress which adjourned so members could attend.

The oath of office was admin-

D. C.-New Orleans Air Service Started, Mrs. Wilson in Plane

New Orleans, Jan. 15 (AP).—A new air service was inaugurated between Washington and New Orleans today when a plane in charge of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker landed at Shushan Airport, bringing as passengers Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and Mrs. Eugene Meyer.

The trip was supervised by Rickenbacker, but the plane was piloted by Dick Merrill, co-pilot.

The party was greeted at the airport by Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley and Mrs. Walmsley, a civic committee from the New Orleans Association of Commerce and many of the city's leading citizens.

Tomorrow Capt. Rickenbacker will make a "real test" flight between New Orleans and New York and return, with the expectation of launching round-trip daylight service between New Orleans and the East.

Breakfast in New Orleans, lunch in New York and dinner in New Orleans—all in the same day—is tomorrow's ambitious schedule which the Eastern Air Lines hope to make permanent in its new transcontinental air service.

On tomorrow's round-trip flight Mayor Walmsley will be a passenger.

Capt. Rickenbacker said the trip was "uneventful," while his passengers, who, in addition to Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Meyer, included officials of the Eastern Air Lines described the inaugural flight of the new route as "very pleasant."

Stepping briskly from the cabin of the big plane to the landing ramp, Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Meyer posed for photographers.

"I am delighted to be here," was Mrs. Wilson's only comment to a newsman, who questioned her about the trip.

Officials of the Eastern Air Lines have announced that they expect to begin regular service on the New Orleans-Atlanta-New York round-trip daylight schedule January 25.

White House Today to Ask Court Entry

Special Message to Be Sent to Senate by the President.

Moved to Step by Start of Debate; Johnson Leads Objectors.

White House determination to drive World Court adherence through the Senate in fulfillment of Democratic platform pledges will be clinched today by the President in special message to the Senate, it was learned last night.

Decision to intervene personally in the protocol fight was reached by the President following opening debate in the Senate yesterday, with Senate Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson challenging dissenters to submit a superior plan.

The White House message will be brief but emphatic, it was said, largely following the tangent taken by Robinson in favoring substitution of "right and justice" for more warlike methods of settling international arguments.

Early Showdown Seen.

The announcement was received jubilantly by World Court exponents on Capitol Hill, who confidently predicted successful conclusion of 13 years of intermittent effort to move America into the international tribunal, with some reservations. The latest White House tack was said to foreshadow an early showdown.

The Senate Democratic leader, whose opening espousal of World Court aims will be followed by just as vigorous an opposition statement today from Senator Hiram Johnson, of California, threw out broad hints of a minority effort to substitute another tribunal for the World Court.

Proponents of the court denied knowledge of the "substitute" plan referred to by Robinson, but the leader stuck to his statement that such an attempt is expected.

"When that is done, you will be surprised and rejoice at the thoughtfulness, the tolerance, the impartiality which underlies the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice," he admonished the Senate.

Talks for 90 Minutes.

Gazing across the aisle at Senator Johnson and Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, another World Court opponent, he continued:

"You will be equally surprised that great minds glorified here have demonstrated their incapacity to devise any plan comparable in its possible advantages and benefits to those of the Permanent Court of International Justice."

In a 90-minute speech, that hammered away on the benefits of world cooperation for "law and order," he heatedly insisted adherence to the protocol would involve no "entangling alliances" or sacrifice "American principles."

To charges that the Senate should be coping with domestic recovery instead of widely remote international affairs, he answered that the Senate has no other business before it until the regular committees submit their legislative slates.

"United States Interest Guarded."

American interests are amply safeguarded by the reservation precluding the court from rendering an advisory opinion in any case in which the United States has or claims interest, he insisted, adding:

"There can be no basis for the assertion that in joining the court this Government compromises its sovereignty or sacrifices its independence."

Before the debate concluded another amendment found its way into the Senate hopper, sponsored by Senator Thomas P. Gore, of Oklahoma, and making payment of Europe's war debt to America prerequisite to World Court adherence.

Senator Johnson was reported to be preparing another, providing that recourse to the World Court for settlement of differences between the United States and a foreign nation can be had only by agreement through specific treaties between the parties in dispute.

Leaders of the opposition, including Johnson and Borah, yesterday contented themselves with leveling a few questions at Robinson. Johnson is expected to militantly assail the leader's arguments today.

Surgeons Fashion A Rubber Throat, Save Baby's Life

Baltimore, Jan. 15 (AP).—A girl baby born here three days ago without a throat opening today had a good chance to live after an emergency operation gave her a rubber tube throat passage.

Surgeons at the Maryland General Hospital said they planned a second operation to restore the throat to its normal functioning.

"After that," said Dr. P. A. Insley, "the child should be able to eat in a normal manner. It can swallow now."

McAdoo Leaves Siam.

Bangkok, Siam, Jan. 15 (AP).—Senator William G. McAdoo left for London after a brief visit here yesterday. He was planning to leave England at once for the United States, to which it was understood he was returning in haste as a consequence of the action of the Supreme Court in invalidating a portion of the code for the oil industry.

Nazis in Saar Hail Victory; Foes Seized

Natives Acclaim Hitler as Enemies Tremble, Fearing Reprisals.

Stars and Stripes Flutter With Swastika in Street Parades.

Saarbruecken, Saar Basin Territory, Jan. 15 (AP).—Nazis late tonight were still whooping it up over their crushing victory in Sunday's prebiscite, while the few thousands who opposed reunion with Germany awaited reprisals in fear and trembling.

As Adolf Hitler's supporters, exuberant over having polled 477,119 of the 525,736 valid votes cast, seized control of the Saarbruecken police force, Socialists, Communists and others who voted for continuance of League of Nations control pleaded with the league governing commission for protection.

Late this evening, however, there had been no violence and the league commission, its authority virtually superseded as the jubilant victors rebelled against foreign control, limited itself to watchful waiting.

Anti-Nazis Seized.

The Nazis, romping through the streets of Saarbruecken and displaying German and Swastika flags, set out as soon as the outcome of the vote was announced officially to round up 120 asserted anti-Nazi members of the capital's police force. Thirty of them, including some refugees from Nazi Germany, were reported under arrest shortly after midday.

Meanwhile Socialists streamed into the Socialist center building here from all over the territory, among them many women and children, and Col. G. G. Knox, head of the league governing commission, was swamped with frantic appeals for military protection.

It was estimated that about 400 anti-Nazis already had fled from the territory, with the expectation that other hundreds would depart before the League of Nations officially turns the territory over to Germany.

Torchlight Parades Held.

In tens of thousands of shop windows and homes of Saarlanders tonight candles burned under portraits of Adolf Hitler, while through the main streets of all Saar Basin cities and towns paraded torchlight processions of exultant Nazis, shouting "Our leader, Adolf Hitler," and "Victory! Hail!"

Nearly every Saarlander turned out in some kind of German uniform ranging from wartime officers' garb down to the brown shirt outfits of children 6 to 10 years old, who marched with shrilling fifes and beating drums under swastika flags.

In the midst of the delirium of joy, the plebiscite commission quietly started for Geneva tonight with its cargo of ballots to be turned over to the league council, which will decide the formal disposition of the territory.

The Saar problem will be laid on the council table tomorrow, with defeated anti-Nazi leaders and their Nazi conquerors working actively in the lobbies of the League of Nations to influence the council's decision.

Communists Plan Plea.

Max Braun and Fritz Pfordt, Communist leaders, accompanied the commission to plead for international protection for the 9 per cent minority which voted against union with Germany. They were preceded by Jakob Pirro and Hermann Roechling, Nazi leaders, who announced their intention of asking immediate return of the territory to Germany.

Any delay, the Nazis argued, would prove detrimental to industry in the Saar.

British troops accompanied the train as far as the Swiss border, where Swiss police boarded the train for the journey to Geneva. The careful guardin... however, is a mere formality, inasmuch as it is the commission's task to report personally to the council what happened Sunday, Monday and Tuesday in the Saar.

Stars and Stripes Parade.

The day-long Nazi celebration, which swept up and down the streets of all the Saar's towns and villages, brought out the old battle flag of imperial Germany, and—a strange sight to American observers—the Stars and Stripes of the United States paraded side by side with the swastika in the march of American Saarlanders who came home to vote.

Conspicuously dark, among the thousands of buildings twinkling with festive lights, was the Socialist Headquarters Building, in which several hundred status quo adherents huddled in fear of an attack.

A representative of the Saar Governing Commission visited the building this evening and was assured by the police inspector commanding the special guard of a dozen policemen that "no harm shall come to these people."

American Officials There.

Rumors spread through Saarbruecken that refugees were flocking across the border into France, but newspapermen watching the boundary could discern no fugitives.

Five fatigued Americans, who played important roles in the historic plebiscite, either are preparing to leave Saarbruecken or already have left.

Miss Sarah Wambaugh, although

State Hides 4 to Blast 'Fisch Myth,' Experts Still Cry 'Hauptmann'

Brother, Sister, Sister-in-Law and Nurse Guarded.

2 More Experts Accuse Prisoner

Thumbguard Maker Is Surprise Witness for Wilentz.

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 15 (AP).—Three German relatives and the nurse of Isador Fisch, Bruno Hauptmann's dead "alibi man," were hidden as secret State witnesses tonight as the carpenter's murder trial prosecutors announced themselves ready to explode "the Fisch myth."

The mysterious manner of their landing from the liner Ile de France in New York Harbor stole considerable interest from the little old Hunterdon County courtroom where the State of New Jersey seeks to send Hauptmann to the electric chair for the kidnap-killing of the Lindbergh baby.

It was Fisch, says Bruno, who went to Germany to die and left with him a shoebox containing more than $14,000 in ransom bills—the bills with which the carpenter was trapped last September.

Two More Experts Testify.

In the musty, crowded courtroom two more handwriting experts—the third and fourth—testified Hauptmann wrote the 14 lying letters that led to payment of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's $50,000 ransom for a baby already dead.

A "surprise" witness for the State, Henry Maish, Cincinnati manufacturer whose firm made the metal thumbguard worn by the kidnaped baby, testified his product would not rust even though it was exposed to the elements for weeks.

The defense had made much of the testimony that the thumbguard, when found by nurse Betty Gow in the Lindbergh roadway at Hopewell a month after the kidnaping, was "bright and shiny."

Prosecutors contend the kidnaper dropped it there when he allegedly ripped the sleeping suit from the slain baby's body on the blustery night of March 1, 1932.

'Pretty Good' Penman.

The State considers the abandoned thumbguard an important link in its charge that Hauptmann killed the baby when he fell from a ladder while descending from the child's nursery.

The handwriting experts were John F. Tyrell, of Milwaukee, and Herbert J. Walter, of Chicago.

Fisch's name was brought directly into the cross-examination of Walter after defense counsel had

Board Submits Three Plans For Extending Recovery Act

Unable to Agree, Final Decision Is Left to Roosevelt.

By Felix Bruner.

After weeks of study, the National Industrial Recovery Board, headed by S. Clay Williams, has reached a conclusion concerning the future of NRA. It has decided that the answer to the problem rests with President Rosevelt.

The President had before him yesterday three opposing recommendations, all coming from the NIRB, which could not agree on a program. The recommendations were transmitted to the White House by Donald R. Richberg, New Deal coordinator. They are in the form of suggestions only, rather than proposed legislation to be submitted to Congress.

The three proposals:

1. That NRA be made permanent in a greatly modified form. This form would make trade practice provisions voluntary, would contain provisions against price fixing, and would require every industry to submit to a code providing minimum wages, maximum hours and prohibition of child labor.

2. That the present act be extended in its present form for a limited period.

3. Substantially the same as the first proposal, except that the act be made effective for a period of not more than two years.

Meanwhile J. Crawford Biggs, Solicitor General, asked the Supreme Court to review a decision of the Federal District Court for northern Alabama holding in effect that the present recovery act is unconstitutional, since Congress made an invalid delegation of power to the President.

The case is based on an effort of the NRA administrator in Alabama to prosecute William E. Belcher for

Ruhland Due To Be Chosen Health Officer

Physician With Record at Syracuse May Take Post Friday.

Dr. George C. Ruhland, health commissioner of Syracuse, N. Y., is expected to be appointed health officer of the District of Columbia Friday.

Once he takes charge, he is expected to adopt reforms that will give the National Capital a new deal in public health.

A physician of wide experience, Dr. Ruhland placed Syracuse among the ten healthiest cities in the United States.

The special committee of physicians headed by Dr. William Gerry Morgan, which was appointed to recommend a successor to Health Officer William C. Fowler, who was retired for age, recommended Dr. Ruhland for the post without a dissenting vote.

The District Commissioners at their regular meeting yesterday telegraphed Dr. Ruhland, asking him to come here for a conference. He replied that he would arrive Friday. The Morgan committee was discharged. Dr. Ruhland's appointment was predicted by The Washington Post in its issue of December 28.

When the committee first recommended Dr. Ruhland, the commissioners forwarded his name to the White House to acquaint President Roosevelt with his career. Then came a delay. There were persistent rumors that his appointment was being held up because he was a Republican. These rumors

Air Mail Ruling Bans Increase In Rate Scales

I. C. C. Held Powerless to Alter Contracts Now in Force.

The spectre of air mail contracts reared its head to trouble the Administration again yesterday. A ruling by the air mail division of the Interstate Commerce Commission that the commission had no power to change mail rates reopened the problem which has been latent since new contracts were made last summer.

Following cancellation of mail contracts, the Post Office Department asked for new bids. When the bids were opened they were revealed to be far lower than any official had anticipated. Some of the contractors admittedly made the bids to retain old routes on the theory that the law gave the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to increase them if they were too low.

Find Rates Too Low.

Some of the companies found that it was impossible for them to continue in business at the rates under which the contracts had been awarded. One line in the Middle West was consolidated with another and a second line sold its contract and went out of business. Both transactions had the approval of Postmaster General Farley.

American Air Lines, which submitted a bid of 8 cents a mile for carrying mail between Chicago and Dallas, Tex., sought to have this rate increased by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It has been carrying mail for more than six

1,100 Jobs Lost Amid Tears As Strike Mill Is Liquidated

Boston, Jan. 15 (AP).—The pleas and tears of Southbridge workers and merchants today failed to save the jobs of 1,100 employes of the Hamilton Woolen Co., one-fifth of the community's employable population, as stockholders of the corporation overwhelmingly voted for liquidation, 26,589 to 815.

"These people will be thrown upon the world helpless as babes," George W. Grant, resident of Southbridge and stockholder, asserted tearfully. After declaring that the community had been built "in great measure by the company" and that adjacent towns with an aggregate population of from 40,000 to 50,000 would be affected, Grant begged for further consideration.

He declared that after "mingling" with the workers, he knew 95 per cent would return if not influenced by "outside organizers, who would sacrifice Southbridge or even Boston, to obtain their own ends."

Grant was so moved that he was unable to proceed.

The plant affected was closed permanently in November after the third strike in four months led the directors to recommend liquidation.

Richard Lennihan, president of the company, replied to the dramatic entreaties by saying the decision had been reached after deliberation, business had been destroyed and that to continue "would endanger the safety of the workers."

Representatives of the workers charged the company was the victim of politics in connection with an attempt by a Federal mediator to settle the strike. Charges of "racketeering" by union organizers also were made by residents.

Arthur Howarth, a foreman at the mill, declared John A. Chumbley, mediator, sent from Washington to aid in settling the strike, "did everything from the point of view of the strikers" despite the fact that it was the "loyal workers" who sought his intervention.

Lion's Assault Injures Beatty

Trainer Suffers Broken Ribs, Bad Cuts When Beast Floors Him.

Rochester, Ind., Jan. 15 (AP).—Clyde Beatty, wild animal trainer, was injured seriously late today at winter circus quarters here when a recently-imported lion attacked him.

The beast knocked Beatty across a 40-foot training arena. The trainer suffered several broken ribs and was cut and bruised badly.

When the lion, called Sampson, struck him, Beatty fought the animal with a straight-backed chair until attendants succeeded in rescuing him. Beatty was attempting to teach the lion a few simple tricks preparatory to placing him in an act with 35 other lions and tigers when the accident occurred. Dr. Mark M. Piper said the trainer will be inactive for several weeks.

The accident was the most serious Beatty has suffered since May 1928, when a Bengal tiger attacked him on an opening day at Kokomo, Ind. On that occasion, a huge Nubian lion, which was Beatty's pet, sprang to the trainer's rescue and drove off the frenzied cat.

Administration Seeks to Block Bonus in Senate

Preliminary Polls Made; Passage in House Viewed Certain.

Administration efforts to block favorable congressional atcion on the $2,000,000 bonus cash payment yesterday were concentrated on the Senate, where preliminary polls are under way to ascertain in advance just how that chamber may be expected to vote.

Informal polls were being conducted for leaders on both sides of the aisle, as White House interest was manifest in possible Senate stoppage on the bonus drive, without recourse to a Presidential veto.

Advance reports to the President have not all been encouraging, it was learned, and reports that eight Republican Senators might stick with the President on the bonus have been challenged in responsible quarters.

House Approval Held Sure.

Transfer of interest to the Senate followed almost positive indications that the House will approve cash payment by a large majority, notwithstanding differences over the bill to be used as the medium of payment. Some split in House veteran ranks nevertheless was imminent.

Representative Wright Patman (Democrat), of Texas, whose bill calls for payment in non-interest bearing notes, offering vast inflation possibilities, will meet with advocates of his measure tomorrow night to map battle plans, despite American Legion indorsement of the bill introduced by Representative Fred Vinson (Democrat), of Kentucky. No financing arrangement is proposed in the Vinson bill.

The House Ways and Means committee may call up the bonus question at a meeting tomorrow. Both the Patman and Vinson measures are before the committee.

Frank N. Belgrano, national commander of the Legion, was quoted yesterday as saying the Legion will not "compromise" on the Vinson bill.

Roosevelt Name Defeats Demand for Bonus Now

Atlanta, Jan. 15 (AP). — President Roosevelt's name was used today to defeat a demand for immediate cash payment of the soldiers' bonus in the Georgia House of Representatives.

The House at first passed a resolution asking for payment at once of the bonus, 81 to 61, then reconsidered and after stormy debate passed an amended act memorializing Congress to pay it "as soon as national finances warrant," 80 to 68.

Gov. Eugene Talmadge is conceded control of both houses of the General Assembly and has frequently opposed certain policies of the President, resulting in conflicts with the National Administration. The Governor, however, took no hand in the bonus fight.

Preparations were made today by both houses for the inauguration of Gov. Talmadge tomorrow for his second two-year term.

Capt. Rickenbacker flew a Douglas plane similar to this to New Orleans yesterday in the inaugural flight of the new daily service between New York, Washington and New Orleans.

Townsend Pension Bill to Make Debut Before House Tomorrow

bers of people have fallen under the spell of the plan can not be doubted.

The dream of idle affluence so possessed the California electorate that politicians dared not or concluded they could not expose its absurdity. Young and old grasped eagerly for it—the young because they imagined it would ease their burdens in caring for their elders or that they would get some of the pension money paid to their elders. The eligible pensioners, of course, saw visions of a glorious, unending stream of cash pouring in on them—money for which they would not have to work. Indeed, the McGroarty bill specifically stipulates that one must give up all work in order to get the money. The only requirement is that the money be freely, quickly spent.

Promises of Votes.

Fantastic as all this is to all who are not victims of wishful-thinking, it has gained so much headway that a surprisingly large number of Congressmen, who know that it would ruin the country, have told Mr. McGroarty that they will vote with him. He says that at least 50 members of the House have signified to him their intention of supporting his bill. Many of these Congressmen conclude that the measure is so visionary that it will get nowhere, and that they may as well vote for it to please such of their constituents as have fallen under the magic spell.

The amazing thing is that those who know how impossible the whole scheme is have been so ineffective. This is due partly to the easy assumption that anything as preposterous could not survive long. It is due partly to the fact that the scheme's proponents brush aside all economics, all facts, all logic, and adopt revivalist appeals to emotion.

Scornful of Economists.

Thus Mr. McGroarty, in discussing his bill, is scornful of all economists or anybody else who disagrees with him. He not only talks in the language of a revivalist but he tells jubilantly of the meetings in schools and churches at which audiences sing hymns, pray and work themselves into a veritable ectasy over the dream conjured up by the plan's promoters. Realism is not only deliberately excluded, but is unwanted. Mr. McGroarty warns that politicians who dare deny the fulfillment of the dream will be swept into the discard by the millions of fervent believers in his Utopia.

"There has never been anything like this to hit the United States," said the gray little Representative. "These blithering economists! All their talk doesn't mean a thing. We're not crazy. We've all been to school. We can read and write. Why, this will mean permanent prosperity. It will empty the poorhouses and the jails. It will cure 90 per cent of our problems. You can't laugh it down. This won't debunk. It's the simplest thing in the world.

"These professional economists can't see it. It comes from the brain of a little country doctor. God always picks a man like that!" The Congressman mentioned Cincinnatus, Washington and Lincoln. "This is a great man," he said of Dr. Townsend. "He's had a vision no less than the prophet who spoke to the Lord face to face."

Asserts He's Practical.

"I'm looked upon as a poet," he remarked, alluding to the fact that the California Legislature once pronounced him poet laureate, "and so I'll be charged with being a dreamer—up in the clouds. But I am a practical man, a lawyer, an owner of property. I am the least of the poets."

He spoke rapturously of the day when the "old folks" began spending their pension money. Factories would hum, storekeepers would run out of stocks so fast that they would have to send out S O S calls for more—a wave of a wand and everlasting prosperity would be here!

As for cold, hard, unhappy, economic truths—"Oh, our experts have figured this all out," he continued. "What do you call 'em—the actuaries—they've figured it all out." No, it was not a racket—but a great cause.

"One of the glories of this thing is that you don't have to declare yourself a pauper," he went on. Even Andrew W. Mellon, he said, could get the pension—if he quit work! "It will settle everything. We're in a hell of a mess—we're stupid. This will meet the challenge of the machine age. It's the only thing that will."

Says They've Only Begun.

As to whether it has spread to New York, he prophesied: "Some day it's going to hit New York—just like Aimee McPherson hit it. There'll be clubs everywhere. We've only just begun!"

Mr. McGroarty is willing to go on and on telling of the "glory" that will come from the fulfillment of the country doctor's dream.

Incredible? Fantastic? Yet there is the bill already drawn—there are the clubs springing up in many States—the millions of names on petitions—letters pouring into Congressmen's offices—the strange, unreal yet actual wave of emotional fervor—the revivalist rapture. It is perhaps the most astonishing political phenomenon of this distressed era. And there is Mr. McGroarty, member of Congress, sitting in his office, with religious zeal in his eyes—with the tone and manner of a prophet who has seen a great light—to whom all facts, figures, realities of the everyday world are as nothing—all to be swept aside in his crusade for Utopia.

France Tests Ocean Plane To Carry 70

Bordeaux, France, Jan. 15 (AP).—A huge French cabin seaplane designed for transoceanic service and capable of carrying 70 passengers made its first trip this afternoon.

The 37-ton ship, with a crew of seven men, christened the "Lieut. de Vaisseau Paris," and called here the largest aircraft in the world, sailed gracefully over Lake Briscarosse in its trial flight. Trial trips to North and South America are planned soon after the preliminary tests here are completed.

The seaplane, propelled by six motors of 850 horsepower each, is 104 feet long, has a wingspread of 162 feet and stands 30 feet high. Housed in its duralumin and stainless steel fuselage, arranged with two decks, are 12 de luxe cabins with two beds and a private bathroom. There are accommodations for 10 other first class and 42 second class passengers.

A bar, kitchen, baggage compartment, radio cabin, navigation compartment and quarters for the crew complete the appointments. The ship, which was three years in the building, cost 25,000,000 francs (about $1,650,000).

With its cruising speed of 145 miles an hour, the ship is expected to need less than 20 hours for the 2,800-mile trip across the North Atlantic.

Poderjay Embarks For Voyage to U. S.

Genoa, Jan. 15 (AP).—Ivan Poderjay boarded the steamer President Polk today for his voyage back to the United States, where he will face charges of bigamy and questioning in connection with the disappearance of Miss Agnes Tufverson, one of his wives.

Jacob Weisenstein, New York detective, and Italian police guarded the former Yugoslav army officer. He was immediately taken below decks and lodged in the liner's brig.

Soldiers Ordered From Strike.

Rossville, Ga., Jan. 15 (AP).—Col. L. C. Pope, commander of National Guard troops on strike duty at the Richmond Hosiery Mills here, today issued an order for the guardsmen to evacuate the strike area and return to their homes tomorrow morning.

Richberg Sees Choice Between Unions, Control

Wage Laws Only Alternative to Bargaining, Auto Industry Told.

Detroit, Jan. 15 (AP).—American industry was warned tonight by Donald R. Richberg, executive director of the national emergency council, that the alternative to voluntary collective bargaining is more political control of wages and hours.

Addressing the National Automobile Dealers Association, he pointed to the Administration's efforts to obtain "adequate organization of all large groups of economic interest," and added:

"It should be apparent that the organization of wages earners to advance their group interests is equally necessary to preserve economic balance in a competitive system.

Sees Demand for Statutes.

"In fact, if workers do not organize as employes you may be positive that they will organize as voters.

"The result will be demands for the regulation terms and conditions of employment by statute instead of by collective bargaining."

Richberg declared it was one of the "ripening fruits of years of widespread opposition by employers to labor organizations and to collective bargaining" that political demands had increased for the fixing of wages and hours of work by legislative act.

"There is only one sure deterrent of increased political control of business along these lines," he asserted, "and that is increased reliance upon collective bargaining."

Hits Forced Organization.

For this reason, he said, the collective bargaining provisions under NRA were considered among the most important. Where formerly "sound labor relations" were established on the basis of "contracts made in good faith and scrupulously fulfilled by both parties," he continued, the "forceful organization of labor, the herding of unwilling men into associations, whether established by employer coercion or by any other form of intimidation" could not provide the foundation of valid or enduring contracts.

"In labor relations, as in every part of the program of economic recovery," he said, "we must rely upon voluntary cooperation—on agreements willingly made and maintained in good faith."

Richberg also addressed himself directly to the automobile industry, urging the necessity for action in eliminating the seasonal fluctuation in production which has caused like fluctuation in employment.

months at the low rate and apparently must continue to do so if it is to hold its contract.

To Expire in March.

All of the contracts were on a nine-month basis, and all of them expire at the same time, in March At that time companies with rates under which they can not profitably carry mail probably will ask that the department readvertise for bids. Ordinarily, the department extends contracts in cases in which the arrangement is satisfactory to both sides.

The present rates average 28½ cents a mile, as compared with 42 cents a mile before the old contracts were canceled. Air line operators estimate that rates on ordinary routes must average 30 cents a mile or more to be profitable.

Another blow to some of the lesser mail lines came several weeks ago when the National Labor Board ruled that all lines carrying mail must pay the board's scale of wages to pilots.

Doolittle Cuts Coast-to-Coast Flying Record

Makes Trip in 11 Hours, 59 Minutes, Beating Eddie Rickenbacker.

Newark, N. J., Jan. 15 (AP).—Maj. James R. (Jimmy) Doolittle, veteran speed pilot, crossed the continent in a transport plane in a minute less than 12 hours today, but blamed himself for not cutting 90 more minutes off the West-to-East record.

"I guess it was just a case of poor piloting," the stubby 38-year-old flier said after he had broken the transcontinental transport mark set two months ago by another veteran, Eddie Rickenbacker. "I got 300 miles off my course in some way and wasted an hour and a half. If it hadn't been for that we'd have reached here that much earlier."

As it was, Doolittle, accompanied by his smiling wife and Robert Adamson, an oil company official, touched the wheels of his low-winged monoplane to the ground at Floyd Bennett Field at 8:26 a. m. (Eastern standard time), 11 hours, 59 minutes after he had taken off at Burbank, Calif. Then he raced here for a landing 8½ minutes later.

Previous Record 12 Hrs. 3 Min.

The wheel-grounding at the New York airport was considered for record purposes despite the fact that Rickenbacker on November 8 ended his flight here. Rickenbacker's time was 12 hours 3 minutes 50 seconds.

When he stepped from the Vultee transport ship to be greeted by Mayor C. Ellenstein, Doolittle was plainly disappointed. "I didn't do the plane justice," he said. "We should have made it in 10½ hours. I don't know how we got so far off course and we didn't realize it until we hit the coast below Cape May."

Blames Weather Man.

Mrs. Doolittle, wearing a fur coat in contrast to her hatless and coatless husband, blamed the weather man for the error.

"It's all right for Jimmy to blame his piloting," she said, "but the weather man should take some of the blame. It was dreadful flying weather."

Doolittle brought a basket of oranges from the California Fruit Growers Association and presented them, apparently by mistake, to Mayor Ellenstein. The mayor ate a couple before he found a letter addressed to Mayor Fiorella LaGuardia of New York in the basket. Although LaGuardia is endeavoring to have the Eastern air terminal moved from here to a New York field, Ellenstein wrote the New York mayor to explain the error and to invite him to share the balance of the California gift "at an orange love feast."

Child Is Struck by Auto Carrying Kent and Bride

Paris, Jan. 15 (U.P.).—A British Embassy motor car in which the Duke and Duchess of Kent were riding to board an airplane at Le Bourget Airport for London today, ran down a 5-year-old girl, Margaret Ollier. She was taken to St. Louis Hospital, where her injuries were said to be superficial.

The young duke, son of the King and Queen of England, and his bride, Mariana, personally attended the girl until she was removed to the clinic. They continued to the field, departing by plane at noon.

Enlarged AAA System Studied At White House

President Also Confers on Plans to Increase Exports of Cotton.

ference and tentatively approved, at least, by the President, included:

Authority to make payments in farm commodities instead of cash. This was suggested to eliminate unnecessary shipping, it was explained in one quarter, since it would enable the AAA to pay with grain, for example, the benefits due on cattle.

Removal of the present requirements to make benefit payments when processing taxes are imposed. One of the most far-reaching of the recommendations, this would permit the AAA to assess taxes on one commodity to help another.

Objects to One Suggestion.

Another proposal of the conference, which Mr. Roosevelt is understood to have frowned upon, was a suggestion that the definition of "parity prices" be revised to take account of taxes, interest and labor costs. Some objection was expressed to this on the grounds it would be too complicating.

The farm conference proposed that the licensing sections of the AAA be clarified with respect to interstate commerce, and that the Secretary of Agriculture be authorized to prescribe licenses for the enforcement of marketing agreements adopted only by producers. This does not go so far as amendments proposed by the AAA last year, which would have extended licensing to processors, too.

The agricultural conference held that price fixing in industry and "unduly high wages on public works" tend to retard recovery, and proposed that corrective steps be taken. It declared that the policy of curtailing farm production has been "forced" on agriculture, and that such a policy must be continued.

On the subject of monetary reform, the farm leaders argued for a revaluation of the dollar to the extent authorized by law and for "active consideration" of the commodity dollar as one means of "preserving and maintaining the benefits accruing from the revaluation of the dollar." Mr. Roosevelt is said to have passed this off with a chuckle.

Ten Rural Credit Aids.

Regarding rural credit, the conference set forth ten steps to liberalize existing credit machinery, including reduction in agricultural interest rates. The group also indorsed Federal purchase of unprofitable farm lands, and recommended that control of grazing lands and forests be taken from the Interior Department and placed under Secretary Wallace.

In a wide variety of other proposals, the farm program called for legislation to give the Secretary of Agriculture greater powers to regulate the packers and stockyards, and to control speculation on the commodity exchanges.

Remedy for Cotton Surplus.

The agricultural conference is composed of five national farm groups. These were represented at the White House by Mr. O'Neal, American Farm Bureau Federation; Clifford Gregory, American Agricultural Editors Association; M. W. Thatcher, Farmers National Grain Corporation; John D. Miller, National Cooperative Council, and L. J. Taber, National Grange.

The presence of Secretary Hull in the White House meeting on cotton hinted at the use of foreign trade agreements as the means for lowering the huge American carryover. Already a 500,000-bale cotton barter deal has been proposed with Germany, but this has been ditched at the request of the State Department.

Tariff Bargain 'Failure' to Be G. O. P. Target

Dickinson to Start Assault in Senate; House Hears Only 1 Pact Made.

By Robert C. Albright.

Alleged failure of the Roosevelt New Deal tariff bargaining program to furnish a speedy method for coping with America's trade problems will be the basis of a series of bitter Republican attacks in House and Senate, it was learned last night.

Senator L. J. Dickinson, of Iowa, will open the minority tariff skirmish in the Senate. He may have some pointed comments to make before the Senate Appropriations Committee in executive session today on the independent office bill, which carries Tariff Commission appropriations.

The assault already has begun in the House, where members want to know why it is that only one reciprocal agreement has been worked out, when the main argument offered in support of the legislation was the opportunity thus afforded for quick rate changes.

New Agreements Near.

The State Department, which has taken the leadership among Government agencies seeking to speed the program, meantime was nearing conclusion of trade bargaining negotiations with Brazil, Haiti and Colombia, and ready to open tariff talks with Canada and Italy. The only agreement of record actually concluded is with Cuba.

High tariff congressional Republicans yesterday pointed to testimony by Sidney Morgan, secretary of the Tariff Commission, before the House Appropriations Committee, in support of arguments that American business will have to stand by for some time to come before the Administration plan shows substantial results.

"As to reciprocal trade negotiations being a method of quick action, I think that view should be amended somewhat," Morgan told the House Commmittee.

Would Transfer Duties.

His testimony was closely examined in the light of reports circulating on Capital Hill that tariff commission functions in respect to reciprocal bargaining and other activities may be transferred in a larger measure to the State department, if some New Deal officials have their way.

Explaining Administrative troubles in getting the program started, Morgan said:

"Before a new trade agreement can be put into effect, it has to be accepted by the executives of both nations, and before it can even be negotiated there has to be an enormous amount of preparatory work; so that in spite of the best good will in the world to make these agreements as promptly as possible, the intricacies and the complications involved on both sides of the water make it a fairly lengthy process."

Act Declared Doomed.

Delay in getting the program under way, however, supplied fuel for only one phase of the tariff issue. While one element was leveling its shafts at failure to get quick action, a larger group of high tariff Republicans is planning a running fire against the act on grounds of alleged discrimination aganist American industry, in favor of foregin manufacturers.

One influential Senate Progressive flatly predicted the act is doomed to failure. Another charged instances where foreign nations have deliberately raised rates on American goods, to provide a bargaining margin.

In defense of the program, departments engaged in working out agreements claim the results of their activity are just beginning to register. They point to increased Cuban consumption of lard and other American products, and speak outimistically of past or future discussions with Belgium, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Sweden, Spain, Switzerland, the Netherlands and Finland.

"The President can not, under the law, change the rate of duty on imports of meat from Argentina just by a stroke of the pen," Morgan told the House committee. "In order to change this rate, the law says, he has got to get a concession from that country of equal value, and the getting of that concession of equal value is the thing that takes a good deal of very careful work."

Senate Group Backs Kennedy Aids on SEC

Committee's Action Hints Early Confirmation of Appointees.

Presaging early confirmation of Chairman Joseph P. Kennedy and his four colleagues on the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Senate Banking and Currency Committee yesterday approved the five Presidential nominations without a contest.

An opposition effort to "question" members of the commission on increased allowances sought for administering the securities and stock market acts collapsed, as a Senate Appropriations sub-committee, sitting at the same hour, restored to $2,370,000 the commission's budgetary allowance.

The House had cut the figure to $2,000,000.

Opposition Fades.

Rumblings of a confirmation fight on commission nominations faded as interest was focused instead on the President's expected appointment to the vacancy on the body, created by Ferdinand Pecora's withdrawal to accept a New York Supreme Court judgeship.

Baldwin B. Bane, of Virginia, executive administrator of the commission, and formerly head of the Federal Trade Commission division which administered the securities act, was said to have strong support at the White House. Other hats in the ring for the commission vacancy include that of Ben Cohen, PWA associate counsel, who assisted in drafting the stock market act.

Moffett Approved.

The Senate Banking Committee voted to report favorably the nomination of James A. Moffett, to be Federal Housing Administrator, but the nomination of Marriner Eccles, as governor of the Federal Reserve Board, was permitted to go over until Senator Glass (Democrat), Virginia, could attend the committee's meeting. Action on the nomination of Adolph C. Miller, veteran member of the board, was similarly deferred.

The Senate confirmed appointment of Anning S. Prall, of New York, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission, after it had been held up a day in the chamber.

Besides Chairman Kennedy, other members of the Securities and Exchange Commission, whose names were approved by the banking committee, were George C. Mathews, James M. Landis, Robert E. Healy and Pecora.

Britain to Honor Dafoe, Physician To Dionne Five

Ottawa, Jan. 15 (AP).—Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe, physician of the famed Dionne quintuplets, will be made a commander of the Order of the British Empire, it was reported here today.

Official confirmation was lacking, but it was understood the name of the physician was recommended too late to Premier R. B. Bennett for inclusion in the King's New Year's honors list.

It was believed here that Dr. Dafoe's honor, whether the C. B. E. or another, will be included in the King's birthday honors June 3, but nothing official will be known until that time.

Mrs. O'Day Indorses Antilynching Bill

Representative Caroline O'Day (Democrat), New York, made her first statement to the press on specific legislation, a strong indorsement of the antilynching bill, the Associated Press reports.

"I have been interested in the efforts Southern women have been making to curb this horrible thing," said Mrs. O'Day, who was born in Perry, Ga. "And I am only too glad to be of real service in the movement. Being a Southern woman, I know how the women of that section feel on the subject."

Byrns to Quit Campaign Post

Crowe, Drewry, Arnold Put Forward as Successor.

Speaker Joseph W. Byrns yesterday made known that he would retire this spring as chairman of the Democratic national congressional campaign committee, according to the Asociated Press.

Immediately, a contest was started among House Democrats for the selection of a successor to guide their congressional campaigns in 1936.

Three members were put forward by their friends for the post.

They are:

Representatives Eugene B. Crowe of Indiana, second vice chairman, Patrick H. Drewry of Virginia, chairman of the executive committee, and William W. Arnold of Illinois, former chairman of the Democratic caucus.

Byrns was elected chairman six years ago and conducted the activities during the campaigns of 1930, 1932 and 1934, during which the Democrats swelled their number from the 165 remaining after the Hoover landslide of 1928, to 322 in 1934.

Police Promotion Of Four Approved

White House Sanctions Changes by Brown.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, yesterday was notified of Presidential approval of four promotions he had recommended in the police ranks. The promotions are effective this morning.

Sergt. Walter H. Thomas, lately assigned to the Traffic Bureau, goes to the Second Precinct as a lieutenant. Sergt. Lawrence R. Beall, now of the First Precinct, goes to the administrative headquarters.

Relieving the two sergeants, now lieutanants, are Albert B. Clark, Second Precinct patrolman promoted to a seargeantcy, who goes to the Fifth Precinct, and George W. Wallrodt, patrolman also promoted who goes from the First to the Eleventh Precinct. Sergt. J. J. Agnew goes from the Fifth Precinct to the Traffic Bureau. Sergt. William W. Shipman relieves Beall at the First Precinct.

Renew Probe In War Office, McSwain Asks

He and Rogers Would Keep Check on 'Vicious and Improper Practices.'

(Associated Press.)

A renewed investigation of the War Department, described as designed to "keep a check on vicious and improper practices," was proposed jointly yesterday by the chairman and by a leading Democratic member of the House Military Affairs Committee.

Chairman McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina, and Representative Rogers (Democrat), New Hampshire, agreed to present the proposal to a full committee meeting tomorrow. Both predicted that the committee and the House would approve the plan.

As a result of an investigation by the committee in the last Congress, Secretary Dern has ordered special studies of accusations against four army officers, including Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, chief of the air corps.

'We Want It All.'

In disclosing the agreement to seek a reopening of the investigation, McSwain said "so far we have only scratched the surface."

"The further we go, the more we find—and we want to find it all," he said.

"Another thing is that it will give us an opportunity to keep a check on vicious and improper practices that have obtained," Rogers asserted.

He recalled that a year ago a grand jury, studying irregularities in War Department expenditures, failed to return any indictments, but submitted specific suggestions to President Roosevelt and Secretary Dern. He added that when the subcommittee which he headed made similar findings, and urged the removal of Foulois, Dern started his present investigation.

For Foulois' "Own Good."

Foulois' removal, Rogers said, was recommended on the ground that he "wilfully and deliberately violated Federal statutes" by buying airplanes without competitive bids; that he "falsely testified," accused superior officers of "attempting to deceive the committee" and advised the Administration that the Army Air Corps could fly the air mail "when he should have known better."

"The committee has not been attempting to dictate to the Secretary of War," Rogers said. "It has made no attempt to have Foulois unduly punished. It recognized his valuable services as a soldier before he became chief of the Air Corps and it was for his protection as well as that of the Air Corps that his removal was suggested.

"If our investigation is extended, it will give the War Department an opportunity to act. On any matters that are overlooked by the War Department, we will be in a position to take further action."

Richards to Head South Carolinians

Representative Is Elected by State Society.

Representative James P. Richards, of the Fifth South Carolina Congressional District, was elected president of the South Carolina Society of Washington last night. He succeeds Representative Hampton P. Fulmer, who was named chairman of the society's executive committee.

Other officers named were Hugh E. Phillips, Edgar Morris, Charles E. Jackson and J Austin Latimer, vice presidents; Ben P. Fishburne, treasurer, and Whitney Tharin, secretary.

Those named to the executive committee included: Senator E. D. Smith; W. F. Stevenson, Maj. Gen. Edward Croft, Rear Admiral Norman M. Smith, Col. Jeter R. Horton, Col. John T. Kennedy, Warren R. ## Persia Changes Name Officially to Iran

Maps of the world, to be up-to-date after March 21, must show the Asiatic country of Iran, otherwise Persia, the Associated Press says.

The Persian legation announced last night that the foreign office in Teheran is presenting formal notes to the envoys of all powers represented there, requesting them in the future to designate the country by that name.

Police Quiz 'Leak' Is Scouted by C.S.C.

But Commission Continues Probe of Rumors.

The Civil Service Commission yesterday stated it was "highly improbable" that there was a "leak" on the questions asked District policemen in the recent examinations for promotion.

However, the commission, with the United States Attorney's office and the Police Department, are continuing an investigation of rumors that photostatic copies of the examination were circulated among policemen prior to the quiz.

It was pointed out that the psychological part of the examination was prepared at the commission and that the practical questions were chosen by the commission from a long list it submitted to Inspectors F. S. W. Burke and L. I. H. Edwards for their approval.

Plea of 'Bender' Fails To Cut Nuptial Bonds

Los Angeles, Jan. 15 (AP).—Harry Clay Mount, jr., actor, and his wife, Viola, actress, were denied an annulment action and a petition for separate maintenance, respectively, today in superior court.

Mount had sought the annulment on the grounds he was mentally incompetent at the time of the marriage, and had been on a two-week "bender." Mrs. Mount, in her suit for separate maintenance, asserted Mount spent all her money, beat her and deserted her nine days after they were married.

Bankers Seek Tighter Check On Bogus Stock

Investment Leaders Map Program at Closing Conference.

The investment bankers of America are about to intensify their war on the peddlers of fraudulent securities.

Battle plans were discussed yesterday at the final meeting of regional chairmen of the Investment Bankers Code committee in the Carlton Hotel. Compliance with the NRA code of fair practices for the business has not been what it should have been. That is why the regional chairmen came here to exchange views among themselves and with Government officials.

Henceforth, it was agreed, there will be closer cooperation among the Investment Bankers Code committee, the NRA Compliance Board, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Better Business Bureaus of the country, to the end that the sale of wildcat issues shall be suppressed.

Ethics Stressed.

However, that is only one objective of the code committee. It seeks also to educate the average dealer to a recognition of the higher standard of ethics established under the code.

The ultimate goal, of course, is to revive public confidence in investment banking and thus make possible the flotation of capital issues that are now so badly needed to hasten the return of better times.

The action of the Securities and Exchange Commission in liberalizing its regulations for registering new issues is expected to cause a spurt in the investment banking business.

Comment Withheld.

However, those attending the meeting of the Investment Bankers Code committee withheld comment until they could see the new regulations.

Among those who addressed yesterday's session, which was executive, were Ralph T. Crane, president of the Investment Bankers Association of America; L. J. Martin, national compliance director of NRA, and Judge John J. Burns, chief counsel of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Bolivia Crushes Paraguay Advance

La Paz, Bolivia, Jan. 15 (U.P.).—Bolivian troops inflicted a stinging defeat on Paraguayan forces today in the Gran Chaco border war, hurling back their latest offensive south of Fort Capirenda. Unofficial Bolivian sources said that 500 men in the famous Paraguayan "Sauces" Regiment were killed and the rest captured.

The fatal Paraguayan maneuver was launched after a series of earlier failures to take the fort from other approaches. The action was a "battle of thirst" for the Paraguayans, sweltering in the heat of the South American summer. Capirenda, which commands a lagoon, was the immediate objective of the Paraguayans in that sector.

Soviet Controls Part of China, Modern Marco Polo Declares

(Copyright, 1935, by The Associated Press.)

Kweihua, Suiyuan Province, China, Jan. 15.—A bold modern Marco Polo who penetrated into China's far northwest province Sinkiang to find Soviet Russia and her Red armies dominant there turned to the south and west today in quest of new adventures.

Peter Orlandini, Italian physician, whose attempt to follow the ancient caravan route across the Asian highlands to his home city of Venice was balked yesterday by the hostility of Sinkiang military authorities, left Peiping yesterday to explore Kiangsi, Hunan, Kweichow and Szechuen provinces.

The Italian traveler, who left Peiping one year ago in his effort to reach Venice, returned recently, after being detained in Siankiang three months, to bring with him the first authentic information as to conditions in that strife-torn area.

The prolonged period of misgovernment and religious warfare in that far-away frontier territory during recent years has laid waste entire villages and wiped out their inhabitants, he said. Vast regions were impoverished, the Italian asserted, with the Mohammedans, who make up the bulk of the population, the heaviest sufferers.

Thanks to military assistance from Soviet Russia, the provincial governor, Gen. Sheng Shih-Tsai, has extended his authority from northern Sinkiang over the entire province, Dr. Orlandini declared.

In 1934, he said, Sheng was in desperate straits when Mohammedan forces, led by the 24-year-old Kansu general, Ma Chung-Ying, assaulted his last important stronghold, Urumchi, capital of the province. Sheng thereupon called on Soviet Russia, with which he had been on friendly terms, for help.

An army of 5,000 Russian troops and ten airplanes were sent across the frontier to assist in reestablishing the authority of the provincial government, the Italian traveler said, the Mohammedans were quickly dispersed and Gen. Ma fled across the frontier into Russia, where he was interned.

As a result of these developments, Dr. Orlandini said Sinkiang has come almost completely under Soviet domination, to the alarm of the British, Japanese and Chinese governments, all of which are intensely interested for political reasons in the drama being played on China's northwestern frontier.

Gen. Sheng continues to give lip service to the national government at Nanking, but his allegiance is only nominal.

Dr. Orlandini said he encountered many indications of the spread of communistic influences in territories of northern Sinkiang, adjacent to the Russian boundary. The Russians, he said, are determined to maintain a stable, friendly regime in that region as a buffer against Mahommedanism and other hostile influences. Virtually all Sinkiang's trade, which once flowed eastward, now is monopolized by Soviet Russia, he said.

Since the Soviet became dominant in Sinkiang, Dr Orlandini declared, foreigners other than Russians are unwelcome there. He spoke from experience. At the end of his three months' detention, he said, he was released only on his promise that he return to Peiping.

Vote Ends Last Claim on Paris, Hitler Declares

Thanks Powers for Fair Saar Election; Germans Celebrate Wildly.

Berlin, Jan. 15 (AP).—The Saar plebiscite result, in the opinion of Reichsfuehrer Hitler, removed the last territorial controversy agitating the relations of France and Germany.

It means, he told his countrymen today in an impassioned radio address, that Germany has no further desire to expand its boundaries at France's expense.

Hitler Thanks Powers.

"Your decision," he said to the Saarlanders, "enables me to offer as our sacrificial and historical contribution to the necessary pacification of Europe the declaration that after your return the German Reich will make no more territorial demands upon France.

"I believe thereby we will also express to the other powers our appreciation for their loyal execution of the election."

Particular satisfaction was expressed in many German quarters that not a single voting precinct returned a majority in opposition to the territory's reunion with Germany.

Germany Celebrates.

News of the Saar plebiscite's overwhelming indorsement of the territory's restoration to Germany was received throughout the Reich with joy.

Schools were closed for the day, their pupils being dismissed after gathering early to listen to the radio broadcast of the returns. Church bells tolled, flags and Nazi ensignia were hoisted at public buildings and private residences and Nazi leaders busied themselves in the organization of mass meetings and torchlight parades.

Hitler, in his radio address, described the plebiscite as a demonstration of the "indissoluble unity of the German people."

"Our success," he said, "was huge because the voice of blood and reason decided and not the Treaty of Versailles, which promised the world peace but brought unrest."

Valuable Coats Stolen.

Shattering a plate glass window in the H. Abramson Co. store, Seventh and L streets northwest, early yesterday, thieves stole a silver muskrat coat, two sealskin coats and a beaver jacket, valued at $639.

Saar Vote Aids Peace Outlook, League Thinks

Result Strengthens Hitler; Area Will Be Turned Over at Once.

Geneva, Jan. 15. (AP).—A prediction that the Saar's return to Germany would hasten solution of Europe's major problems was voiced in League of Nations circles tonight as the league council made ready to hand the territory over to the Reich without delay.

Although some sources professed the fear that the smashing German victory in the voting Sunday might stir agitation for plebiscites in other former German territories, the consensus was that prospects for peace were improved.

Hitler Strengthened.

The German victory greatly strengthened Adolf Hitler, in the opinion of most Geneva observers, and reinforced Germany's position among the continent's great powers.

The German chancellor's post-plebiscite broadcast was generally deemed conciliatory in nature, and hence likely to facilitate settlement of problems growing out of the recent Franco-Italian accords.

As Germany's early return to the league was forecast, league circles also saw the possibility that negotiations for disarmament might be profitably renewed. The problem of Austria's independence also will be favorably affected, they said.

Formalities Today.

Formalities of publicly proclaiming the Saar's reannexation to Germany will be paid, possibly taking place tomorrow. The council meets at 4 p. m. to receive the personal report of the plebiscite commission as to whether the balloting was secret, free and trustworthy.

James G. McDonald, the league's high commissioner for refugees from Germany, arrived from New York today to study any refugee problem growing out of the German victory.

she has gone to Geneva, will return to Saarbruecken before sailing for home.

James Pollock, the American professor who crossed the Atlantic at his own expense to gather first-hand information about the plebiscite, left for America tonight after serving as one of the 900 "dictators for a day" who supervised the ballot.

John Hartigan, of San Francisco, former concert singer and member of the Hoover relief committee in Rumania, who served as district inspector in St. Ingbert, will leave soon, as will Philip M. Brody, of New York City, and Andrew B. Foster, of the University of Pennsylvania, assistant district inspector.

France Hopes Victory Will Pacify Hitler

Paris, Jan. 15 (AP).—A hope that his victory in the Saar plebiscite would pacify Adolf Hitler was held widely in France tonight, but there was an undercurrent of anxiety lest he become more dangerous.

As the force of French gendarmes guarding the Saar frontier once again was strengthened in anticipation of border incidents growing out of the Nazis' victory celebration, the opinion was freely expressed that the overwhelming vote given Germany in the plebiscite tremendously strengthened Hitler.

Officials were startled by the feeble showing of the status quo adherents, but they took the outcome with the best grace possible.

Treasury Acts To Allay Fears In Gold Actions

Seeks to Calm Fears of Markets of Revised Dollar Value.

tions a return to the original gold value of the dollar would have definite advantages.

Price fluctuations appeared to be set in motion in Paris and London where the dollar's value in relation to the franc and the pound showed marked increases. It was reported that many persons with foreign exchange balances abroad sought to convert them into dollars. Foreign exchange rates in New York suffered their worst relapse in more than a year, the Associated Press reported.

Pound Is Down.

At London the pound went down to 4.83¾, but later came back to $4.85, less than the old gold parity. The dollar was more valuable in relation to the pound than at any time since November, 1933. Francs went down to 6.47½ cents, but closed at 6.56⅛ cents, a decline of .03⅜ cents. The guilder dropped .42 of a cent, while the Canadian dollar, touching 99.75 cents, closed at a discount for the first time since last February.

In New York stock prices weakened, led by gold mining shares, showing losses from $1 to $8. Homestake Mining showed a loss of $28 at $350, after being even lower. Sales on the "big board" in New York totaled 1,450,000 shares. High-grade gold bonds, along with Government issues, were firm or showed small gains, but secondary bond prices weakened.

Cotton, an export commodity, dropped about $1 a bale while at Chicago wheat went down about 4 cents a bushel, the lowest in three months. The closing prices were between 2¾ and 3⅞ cents lower than Monday. Corn prices dropped 2½ cents to 4 cents a bushel. The commodity price list average was weaker.

Cause of Fluctuations.

In dispatches reporting all these price fluctuations the Associated Press invariably named as the reason confusion and apprehension over the decision in the gold clause cases and of subsequent action by the Government returning to the old gold dollar value.

The nervous tension which caused these price gyrations eased toward the close of the day. The day's developments, however, were cited as an indication of what might be expected if the Administration abandoned its venture into gold devaluation.

Reversal of the program at one fell stroke, it was argued, would result in a severe shock to the economic structure and set in motion a deflationary movement that might be difficult to check. But Administrationists emphasized such speculation was academic because they did not believe the Supreme Court would upset the gold-clause abrogation.

President's Power Cited.

Incidentally, the Treasury, in reply to a suggestion from Capitol Hill that Congress might pass legislation fixing the gold content of the dollar at the point now established by the President, held this was unnecessary. Not only did the President have clear authority to act, it was explained, but Congress last June in passing the Philippine currency act had ratified in effect the President's devaluation proclamation.

This act appropriated money to pay the Philippine treasury the equivalent in dollars of the increment in its gold deposits in this country resulting from devaluation. The statute cited the President's proclamation as justifying the appropriation.

The meeting of inflationary groups scheduled to start at 10 a. m. today in the white marble agricultural committee room of the Senate will be conducted under the guiding hand of Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, insistent agitator for currency inflation.

Father Coughlin Expected.

Among those expected to attend was the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, the radio priest, who has formed the National League for Social Justice. Other organizations asked to send spokesmen were the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union; American Farm Federation, National Grange, Sound Money League, American Society of Martians, the National Depositors Committee, Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Legion, Western States Silver Conference, the House Farm Bloc and the Committee for the Nation.

The last named organization yesterday sent a letter to each member of Congress warning that "internationalist bankers" were seeking to reestablish their former policies and demanding that this country "join the continental gold bloc." The committee urged Congress to stand fast by the "New Deal" gold program.

The tall, silver-haired Senator Thomas declared that the organizations which will be represented at his meeting "express the sentiment" of 75,000,000 persons. He said the object of the meeting would be to get concerted action behind one method of cheapening the dollar. At present there are half a dozen plans, ranging from further gold dollar devaluation and free-coinage of silver to payment of the bonus with a special currency issue.

Farm Group's Proposal.

Spokesmen for the farm organizations that will attend today's meeting, in a visit to the White House, included in a broad agricultural program presented to the President a plea for further devaluation of the dollar to the full extent authorized by law.

They also urged the President to give "active consideration to the establishment of the commodity dollar as a method of preserving and maintaining the benefits accruing from the revaluation of the dollar." On hearing this proposal the President was said to have smiled pleasantly, but made no response.

Peery Invites Justices Of Virginia to Parley

Richmond, Va., Jan. 15 (AP).—Engraved invitations went out today in the name of Gov. Peery to trial justices throughout the State inviting them to a conference to be held here Friday, January 25.

The purpose of the conference, as stated on the program accompanying the invitation, is "to discuss the work of the trial justice courts, departments, institutions and agencies in the enforcement of health, welfare, labor, school attendance, motor vehicle, alcoholic beverage control, licenses tax, game and fisheries and other laws; collections and allowances; records, use of State and local resources in the disposition of cases; probation, and any other matters of interest.

900 Who Failed In Test Assured Jobs by Ruling

Successful Competitor's Move Overruled in Treasury Case.

Approximately 900 Alcohol Tax Unit employes who failed in a recent civil service examination were assured yesterday of retaining their jobs temporarily when District Supreme Court Justice Jesse C. Adkins decided Samuel W. Cohen, of New York City, could not compel the Secretary of the Treasury to dismiss them and fill their places with those who passed the examination.

Cohen, one of those who passed the examination, contended the Treasury official had no right to retain the unsuccessful candidates on a "duty status" without pay. He asked that they be discharged and their places filled from among some 1,400 applicants who passed the test, including himself.

Justice Adkins decided that Cohen, merely being on the eligible list for appointment as an investigator, could not compel Secretary Morgenthau to appoint him. It was held such an appointment is within the discretion of the official, and that Cohen, merely by passing the examination did not become "entitled" to the position.

Assistant United States Attorney Henry Schweinhaut, appearing on behalf of Mr. Morgenthau, argued Cohen did not have a sufficient interest to maintain his suit, that a court order, under the circumstances in this case, will not interfere with the appointment and removal of executive employes, and that Cohen's remedy, if any, lies in a suit at law.

The competitive examination was ordered after Congress adopted a rider to the last appropriation bill for the department, which stipulated that the money appropriated could not be used to pay salaries of tax unit investigators until they had passed the examination.

Ship Harassed His Clams, Man Charges in Suit

Seattle, Jan. 15 (AP).—J. L. Carroll filed suit for $8,000 against the Puget Sound Navigation Co. today, alleging the wake of the steamer Chippewa Chase, passing at high speed near Watauga Beach, disturbed, harassed, molested, evicted and otherwise annoyed his clams.

Prof. Trevor Kincaid, head of the department of zoology at the University of Washington, an expert on bivalves, declared his sympathies will be with the clams.

"The clam is a retiring fellow, modest and unassuming," the professor explained, "and he takes the attitude that every stranger wants him to put up or shut up. So he shuts up. I don't believe, therefore, that the clams could have molested the boat."

"A boat, churning its propeller near a clam bed at high speed, might well disturb and injure the clams. It would take a great deal of provocation to make a Puget Sound clam move, however, as he has a disposition to turn the other shell. He would only stew in his own indignation unless seriously perturbed. A razorback clam, however, might go 100 feet out of his way to resent an injury."

Titled Wife Granted Kaufmann Divorce

Reno, Nev., Jan. 15 (AP).—The Vicomtesse Joan d'Avigdor Kaufmann, daughter of the Conte Digby d'Avigdor, French diplomat, obtained a divorce here today from George Kaufmann, of New York, on a charge of extreme cruelty.

The decree was granted at a private hearing. They were married December 17, 1932, in New York City.

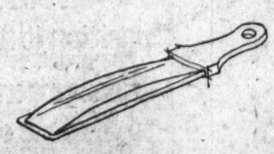
So give your eyes the best of care. And that means an accurate prescription, carefully filled by a skilled optometrist. It means frames selected from a wide collection of comfortable and unobtrusive frames and mountings to suit your features. And it may, if you wish, include a second pair of glasses, oxfords or a lorgnette, for festive occasions.

But eye glasses are only the beginning of the "labor saving" devices which our optical section boasts. There are oblong magnifiers designed to enlarge the names and accompanying numbers in a telephone directory. There are magnifiers to enlarge the obscure printing on maps and globes. And reading glasses for magazines, newspapers and books. There are field glasses to bring the home stretch nearer and opera glasses to achieve a close-up of the leading lady. And there are prism binoculars.



And the list does not stop here. For a whole group of "indicators" bear large clear letters to be more readable. Humiguiders measure the humidity in the air. Thermometers tell the present temperature . . . indoors and out . . . and barometers forecast what the weather is likely to become. # Reins in Texas Held by Allred At Age of 36

Former Newsboy Inducted as Successor to 'Ma' Ferguson.

Austin, Tex., Jan. 15 (AP).—Youth took over the executive mansion of Texas today.

Succeeding Gov. Miriam "Ma" Ferguson and her husband, James E. Ferguson, the veterans of many political campaigns, were James V. Allred, 36-year-old former newsboy, and the demure mother of his two young sons, Mrs. Jo Betsy Miller Allred, 29.

It marked the return of the country to an all-masculine basis in the matter of Governors.

Mrs. Ferguson and her husband both were elected to two terms in the highest State office. Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, former Governor of Wyoming, is now director of the mint.

Happy Beyond Measure.

Mrs. Allred said she was "happy beyond measure to be the wife of the Governor of Texas."

"Because of my lack of experience," she said, "doubtless I will make mistakes as a hostess. However, I am willling to learn and will try to make Jimmie's friends feel at home in the mansion."

Allred stepped into the governorship after serving four years as attorney general. He is a Democrat, as are the Fergusons.

Both the retiring chief executive and her husband said they were "not leaving politics forever."

Federal Tie-Up Pledged.

Gov. Allred, in his inaugural address, pledged close cooperation with the National Government in its recovery program and rigid enforcement of the laws of the State.

He proposed to coordinate the State relief program with that of the Federal Government by public works projects, old-age pensions, soil erosion prevention and "in every other worthwhile manner."

Mother Ordered To Give Up 3 Sons

Judge Revokes Previous Custody Decision.

Los Angeles, Jan. 15 (AP).—Mrs. Ann Hamilton Cusack, who left California during the Christmas holidays with her children and was pursued into Texas by her husband, Charles Edmund Cusack, was ordered today by Superior Judge Isaac Pacht to surrender their three sons to Cusack.

Cusack, member of a prominent Chicago family, petitioned for custody of the children, who had previously been awarded to Mrs. Cusack after a divorce action had been denied.

Judge Pacht revoked his previous order giving the children to Mrs. Cusack and sharply criticized her. He previously had ordered that the children should not be removed from California.

istered by Chief Justice Robert S. Frazer of the State Supreme Court.

"So Long Gifford."

As the last echoes of a 19-gun inaugural salute died away, Gifford Pinchot, independent Republican whom Earle succeeded, left the inaugural rostrum. His department marked the end of half a century of Republican administrations and drew from the jubilant thousands the parting cries of:

"So long Gifford."

"So long Giffy."

Former Gov. Pinchot and his wife, having relinquished the executive mansion to the Earles, were escorted by motor patrol to the edge of the city.

They transferred from a State car to their own automobile for the trip to their Pike County home.

Earle's inaugural address completed, he was taken in an open automobile over the route of the inaugural parade.

30,000 in Parade.

Four State motor patrolmen, riding abreast, hurried the new chief executive over the 4-mile route and back to the rostrum, where he viewed the marching spectacle of 30,000 hilarious political followers.

They came with their brass bands, canes and costumes to make this the day of days for the new democracy.

Through the half hour address, the huge crowd remained attentive and orderly Amid a tumultous roar, Earle concluded his address at 12:46.

Airplanes zoomed over the outskirts of the crowd. The parade was formed and sent on its way by Col. Fred C. Kerr, marshal of the day.

State policemen, nattily attired and personally supervised by Maj. Lynn G. Adams, patrolled the teeming acres.

Prominent among the thousands of guests were United States Senator Joseph F. Guffey, field general of the victorious Democratic forces of the State, and Postmaster General James A. Farley.

Ruhland Pick Of Committee As Health Chief

were denied yesterday by Commissioner George E. Allen.

Dr. Ruhland not only carried the recommendation of the special advisory committee of physicians, but also was strongly urged for the position by 13 outstanding medical men, including the heads of several medical and public health schools. The formal report of the committee to the commissioners said:

"The committee felt that Dr. Ruhland's every qualification, compared with those of all other men considered, was so far superior that the committee could transmit only his name as its selection.

"In accepting the charge from the commissioners to select the best man available, the committee did so with the feeling that at last an enlightened point of view was being expressed by government in the selection of a leader to conduct this first important function of government, namely, the care of the health of the people.

"In the nomination we have transmitted we have been influenced solely by the qualifications of this candidate as an outstanding leader in the health field on his own record and by the many recommendations which have come to us in response to our inquiries from nationally recognized health authorities."

Dr. Ruhland's Record.

Dr. Ruhland is 56 years old. He was graduated from Concordia College, Moorhead, Minn., in 1897. In the war with Spain he served as a newspaper correspondent in Puerto Rico.

After the war he went back to school, being graduated from the Wisconsin College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1904.

From 1905 to 1914 he was connected with the laboratory of the Milwaukee health department, first as bacteriologist and later as its director.

He was named health commissioner of Milwaukee in 1914 and held the position until he went to Syracuse in 1924, except for a period during the World War, when he was with the United States Army. He was discharged with the rank of major.

Dr. Ruhland in 1924 was made deputy commissioner and director of the Syracuse health demonstration, financed in part by the Milbank memorial fund. Four years later he became the city's first full-time health commissioner, charged with the task of placing health administration on an efficient basis.

True love's bumpy course, which ended in misunderstanding, yesterday led George B. Furman to District Supreme Court in quest of a $1,600 diamond ring, which he gave his fiancee when the "dew still was on the rose."

The complainant said he gave the ring to Miss Alice M. Gilbert when they became engaged September 14. Later she refused to marry him. Since then, Furman asserted, he asked for the ring, but his requests were unsuccessful.

He stated he wishes the court to order the ring returned. He is represented by Attorneys William E. Leahy and Eugene B. Sullivan.

Fowler Named Head of County Liquor Control

Washington Lawyer Picked by New Montgomery Commissioners.

Ralph S. Fowler, Chevy Chase, Md., attorney and a Republican, was appointed chairman of the Montgomery County liquor control board yesterday by the Montgomery County commissioners meeting in the courthouse at Rockville, Md.

Mr. Fowler, a native of Delaware, has been a resident of Montgomery County since 1925. He lives at 106 Hesketh street, Chevy Chase, and maintains a law office at 729 Fifteenth street northwest, this city. A graduate of the University of Maryland in 1924, he has been admitted to the bar of the United States Supreme Court, the District Supreme Court, and the Maryland Court of Appeals. He is a member of Beta Theta Pi Fraternity and the Washington Golf and Country Club.

Salary For Post Slashed.

Mr. Fowler was counsel for the property owners of Wisconsin avenue when they opposed the terms of the widening of that street and is counsel for James P. Viers in his suit against County Commissioners John B. Diamond and Robert D. Hagner for back salary. He has been active in Republican county politics.

Fowler will receive a salary of $600 per annum. He succeeds Dr. Benjamin C. Perry, of Bethesda, who received $2,400.

Miss Anna S. Abert, of Rockville, was appointed a special clerk in the office of the supervisor of assessments at a salary of $720 a year. She is a Republican. Miss Edna Fisher resigned as a clerk in the county commissioner's office to accept a post in the office of the clerk of the iruit ourt.

The commissioners discussed the proposed legislative program at length but did not arrive at any definite results. It is expected that the program will be drafted at the Thursday meeting of the commissioners.

Status of County Bonds.

The commissioners voted to send a bill for $8,892.92 for engineering services presented by Harry Shaw, county engineer, to the State Roads Commission. The bill is for work done by the county engineering department from July 1, 1933 to December 1, 1934.

Alexander K. Hancock, county auditor, reported on the status of bond issues in the county. He said that principal of $530,500 and interest of $428,460.13 will be due in the fiscal year of 1935-1936 and principal of $393,500 and interest of $411,025.13 will be due in the fiscal year of 1936-1937.

Mr. Hancock pointed out that an addition of 40 to 45 cents on the tax rate will be necessary unless there is an increase in the county taxable basis or the money is raised some other way in order to pay the interest money due in the fiscal year 1935-1936. He declared he believed the interest should be paid from current revenues in order to maintain the credit standing of the county and not to place too heavy a burden on later years.

Tax Collection Charge.

Hancock said that of the $530,500 principal due, $300,000 is for Montgomery County school-construction bonds of 1934 due in October, 1935, and that since these bonds had been issued for the short period of one year and four months they should be refinanced as long-term bonds. He said the remaining $280,500 should be paid from current revenue, if possible, although this would necessitate a further increase in the tax rate from 25 to 30 cents. He suggested the commissioners should obtain legislative sanction to refund the maturing bonds if it became necessary.

Hancock further suggested that legislation to make it clear that certificates of indebtedness can be extended from time to time as the special assessments upon which they are issued remain unpaid. He further pointed out that no general reassessment has been held since 1928 and that property valuts are not fairly represented by these assessments he suggested that a general reassessment should be held at a cost of approximately $40,000. The auditor further suggested that a charge be made on special taxing areas for collecting their taxes through the treasurer's office.

U. of Md. Students Seek Speed Curb

Patrols to Be Requested at College Park.

Acknewledging numerous complaints against the allegedly hazardous condition caused by speeders on the Baltimore boulevard in front of the University of Maryland, students of the school have decided to ask for a special police patrol.

According to the Diamondback, official student publication, Capt. Edward McK. Johnson, head of the State police force, will be asked to dispatch a special officer to cover the 25-mile limit zone.

Students also will appeal to the State roads commission to erect more conspicuous signs, cautioning the motorists to obey the zone limit. The hazard is caused as hundreds of students leave or enter the campus gates at class changing periods.

Warren Tydings, president of the Student Government Association, has appointed Thomas Corwin, men's representative to the association, to cooperate with Marshall Mathias, editor of the Diamondback, in launching a safety drive.

Merchant Wins Court Case and Accuses Police

Belgrad Charges He Was Injured in Arrest Over Parking Ticket.

A charge of disorderly conduct, brought against Harold S. Belgrad, 30, dry goods store proprietor, of the 400 block of Kennedy street northwest, by Policeman J. F. Hasty, of the Sixth Precinct, yesterday was dismissed by Judge John P. McMahon.

Representing Belgrad, Attorney James Couch asserted his client will file charges of illegal arrest and assault against Hasty before the Police Trial Board within the next few days. Couch appeared in court in Belgrad's behalf at the request of the Keystone Automobile Club.

According to Belgrad's testimony, last Saturday he called the precinct and asked to have a policeman on his beat come to the store and discuss a parking ticket Belgrad had received.

Policeman Hasty came to the store, Belgrad testified, and a discussion followed. Hasty placed Belgrad under arrest. According to Belgrad's testimony, he seized him and threw him to the floor. His head struck a radiator, and was cut severely.

Without allowing him to lock the store, Belgrad said, the policeman took him to the station house. There he told the desk clerk to charge the prisoner with parking over 18 hours, and also told him to enter Belgrad's name a second time, leaving the charge open.

After a conference with Capt. Pierson, Belgrad said, a second charge of disorderly conduct was lodged against him. He then was allowed to post collateral and go home.

Riding today were Miss Nancy Rust, Baylor Metzger, John Kincaid, L. Clark Hoge, Stilson Hall and Claude Hatcher.

Mrs. Sherman, Club Leader, Dies in Denver

Accident Occurring in D.C. Last October Held Cause of Death.

Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, the woman who made the United States Bureau of the Census consider wives and mothers as having the occupation of "homemaker," died yesterday in Denver from injuries received in an automobile accident here on October 19.

Mrs. Sherman, well-known in Washington, lived at the Grafton Hotel when she was here. She was president of the National Federation of Women's Clubs from 1924 until 1928. One of her achievements was manifested in the 1930 census when women in homes were listed as "homemakers" instead of being called occupationless, as in former censuses.

After the accident, Mrs. Sherman was removed to Emergency Hospital where she was treated for a possible fractured skull. She remained there until several days ago when her son removed her to her home in Denver. The accident occurred at Seventeenth and K streets northwest. She was struck by a Capital Transit Co. bus, operated by Walter Smith, 31, of 24 Seaton place northwest. The coroner is investigating.

Mrs. Sherman, during her women's club work, was particularly interested in problems of the home. It was under her direction that the federation took a vast census of home equipment, particularly of electrical devices, several years ago. Shew as a member of the National George Washington Bicentennial Commission.

Extension Granted In Rate Filing Time

Cumberland Power Costs to Be Reduced.

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 15 (Spl.). City Solicitor Lewis M. Wilson informed the mayor and city council today that the public service commission has extended the time for one week for the filing of the new scales of rates of the Potomac Edison Co. The date for filing is now January 21, he said.

The attorney also stated he has been reliably informed that the reduction in rates to the average consumer will be more than 10 per cent, and that rates may be brought to a point equal to or near those charged in Hagerstown.

He explained there has been some misunderstanding by local officials of the ruling in the case, and the reduction was not ordered as a 10 per cent lowering of rates, but a reduction of 10 per cetn in the earnings of the company. This may result, he said, in as much as 15 or 18 per cent lower light bills to the consumer.

Board at Odds, NRA Future Up To WhiteHouse

Richberg Submits 3 Plans for Extension of Recovery Act.

violation of the maximum working hours provision of the lumber and timber products code. An indictment was returned by the Federal grand jury but Mr. Belcher demurred to the indictment, holding the recovery act invalid. The district court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the indictment.

This case will bring before the Supreme Court another aspect of the recovery act, that dealing with working hours. The court's decision will influence whatever changes Congress decides to make in the law regarding the fixing of maximum hours of employment.

None of the NIRB proposals touches upon Section 7(a) or other labor provisions. NIRB has taken the stand that any such recommendations should come from the National Labor Relations Board. Sentiment in NIRB, however, is said to favor retention of Section 7(a) in its present form.

Both business and labor organizations have been asked unofficially their attitude on the labor section of the recovery act. Assurances are said to have been given by both groups that they will not seriously oppose keeping the section in the new law. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, recently expressed himself as willing to see Section 7(a) continued on the ground that if the question is opened "we might get something worse." There is considerable opposition also from business sources to opening up the whole question of NRA on the ground that while the present law is not altogether satisfactory, a new act might be less so.

Cites Means of Change.

The NIRB, it is understood, has pointed out that if the law, which expires June 16, is extended in its present form, necessary changes could always be made by Executive order. Some of these changes probably would involve price-fixing provisions in the codes, which recently were under discussion in public hearings. The NIRB is on record as favoring relaxation of these provisions. Similarly, public hearings on labor provisions of codes will begin January 30. The board will attempt to steer discussion away from legislation, confining it to labor provisions in codes.

In addition to NRA legislation, the board and Administration leaders have discussed the possibility of asking for special legislation covering natural resources industries. Such legislation would give the oil, coal and other natural resources businesses an NRA of their own. This legislation would particularly cover the matter of price control. The coal industry is drafting a bill under which it is seeking to write its code, including price provisions, into law. This measure might be extended to cover other natural resources industries.

One of the circumstances which has deterred writing a definite NRA bill, it is understood, is the recent decision of the Supreme Court holding the "hot oil" transportation section of NIRA unconstitutional. This decision was based on the ground that the act delegated too much power to the President.

The action of NIRB in sending three sets of recommendations to the White House leaves the whole question of NRA almost where it started. The President has given no definite indication of his attitude. It is expected that when he decides upon a definite course he will call upon Richberg and the NIRB to draft a bill for presentation to Congress.

Industry and business are expected actively to oppose any move to make NRA permanent, but there is expected to be no serious opposition to an extension of the law in a modified form.

Crabbers Fight Pay Scale Cuts

Maryland and Virginia Packers Unable to Agree on Code.

Maryland and Virginia crab packing interests clashed yesterday at an NRA hearing on revisions of the blue crab code proposed by 17 Virginia firms through their organization, the Virginia Crab Packers Association, according to the Associated Press.

The Virginians asked that the prohibition against catching sponge crabs—females during the breeding season—be taken out of the code and that the minimum wage rates of 6 cents per pound and 18 cents per hour for pickers be reduced to 4 cents per pound and 16 cents per hour.

The Maryland opposition was voiced through the seafood division of the Crisfield Chamber of Commerce, of which I. H. Tawes, president, and A. Earle Dize, secretary, spoke.

The Marylanders said pickers were paid 7 cents per pound—a cent more than the minimum code rate—and that they were willing to continue this piece rate, but they asked the elimination of minimum hourly rates.

Richard Armstrong, commissioner of fisheries of Virginia, said elimination of the crab industry in Virginia through code provisions which prevent it from meeting competition with crabs from Japan and elsewhere would throw out of work many crabbers and pickers who could obtain no other work.

President Lights Beacon in Honor Of Mark Twain

Hannibal, Mo., Jan. 15 (AP).—The rugged abilities of Mark Twain, creator of Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn, were extolled tonight at the spot where the boyish characters once walked and talked.

President Roosevelt and Gov. Guy B. Park joined in opening a year's celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Samuel L. Clemens, who as Mark Twain, the humorist-philosopher, won the acclaim of the world.

Dignitaries of Missouri, led by Gov. Park, swarmed into Hannibal for a dinner preliminary to a radio chain broadcast.

From Detroit came the voice of Mme. Clare Clemens Gabrilowitsch, daughter of the Missouri author.

President Roosevelt, at Washington, touched a golden key to illuminate a memorial lighthouse on Cardiff hill, overlooking the wide sweep of the Mississippi River.

It was on Cardiff hill that Tom Sawyer, generally admitted to have been Mark Twain himself, and "Huck" Finn, his boyish accomplice, planned many of the escapades recounted in Tom Sawyer.

Well Done!

Appointment of Dr. George C. Ruhland as Health Officer of the District is foreshadowed by the Commissioners' request for a conference with him in Washington. Dr. Ruhland is the sole candidate for this position recommended by a special committee which canvassed the entire country for the best public health executive available. It is understood that he is willing to accept the responsibility of reorganizing the local Health Department even though his salary will be less than he is now receiving as health commissioner of Syracuse, N. Y. Dr. Ruhland's definite appointment, therefore, would seem to await only the customary formalities.

The District Commissioners have manifested a high degree of public spirit in reaching their decision. In the first instance they chose a committee of experts to suggest one or more candidates entirely on the basis of merit. This committee was given a free hand and made its selection without the slightest reference to politics or any consideration other than the qualifications of the public health experts whose records it studied. In making its report the committee had the courage to suggest a single name. Likewise the Commissioners have had the courage to limit their considerations to that one individual, without regard for political pressure or petty criticism.

Political considerations are said to have been injected from sources higher than the Commissioners. But they have not deviated from their proper course. The public has reason to feel gratification when the heads of the local government, who themselves are political appointees, have the stamina to carry through such an excellent piece of work, in spite of opposition from national officials who place partisanship above the local welfare.

If this appointment is finally consummated, it will mark a model precedent in the administration of District government.

The Johnson Papers.

Nearly a year ago, at the Code Authority Conference called in Washington early last March, President Roosevelt and Gen. Hugh S. Johnson sat together on the platform at Constitution Hall. The general then heard the President observe:

> If we admit that the Government has a specific problem to solve and undertakes to do it in a specific way, the critic is unpatriotic who contents himself with loudly proclaiming that that way, that method is no good; that it won't work; that it is wrong to do this. This critic contributes nothing—he is not constructive; he is unpatriotic because he attempts to destroy without even suggesting a way to build up.

In the series of articles which Gen. Johnson is now writing for the Saturday Evening Post, he evidently has forgotten, or prefers to ignore, Mr. Roosevelt's strictures on hostile criticism. When he calls our monetary policy "harum scarum on any analysis" and says that there is no instance in world history of such a policy working "except to a result of collapse and ruin," he certainly comes close to the President's definition of an unpatriotic critic.

Much water has flowed down the Potomac in the last year, however, and even though Gen. Johnson seems to be developing a curious affinity with some whom he once denounced as Neanderthalers, his observations must be regarded as constructive rather than destructive criticism.

Many of his observations represent the easy wisdom which comes from retrospect; many of them are wide open to retaliatory criticism, if not to a charge of superficiality. But in the upshot, the general is taking a courageous and very helpful action by giving to the American public the reasoned conclusions resulting from his unique experiences in a key position of the New Deal.

If he does not gloss over the mistakes of others he is equally frank in recognizing his own "many blunders." Such an analysis, seeking to isolate basic principles from the welter of experimental policies in which the Nation is now floundering, can scarcely fail to be as constructive as it is significant.

Message To Garcia.

There seem to be some people seriously concerned over these new doubts about the Message to Garcia. An egregious debunker declares there was no sich animal. The son of that Cuban general whom high tradition names as the recipient vows he has the original text—somewhere. And the story's hero—Col. Rowan—who, still according to the legend, was ordered to find fighting Garcia somewhere in the jungles of his native island, and who did find him—that Col. Rowan says both of the other controversialists are wrong: there was a message, but it was verbal.

Why not a fourth and larger view?

A clever pamphleteer, the late Elbert Hubbard, took the bare facts and from them made a tract which, though pompous, renewed, in a materialistic era, the best conceptions of fidelity, courage and resourcefulness. Whether there was never, either written or spoken, any specific Rowan-borne Message to Garcia seems somehow immaterial.

Browning admitted that, so far as he knew, nobody "brought the good news from Ghent to Aix." What of it? Every one of us knows that Dirk and his friends "galloped all three" across a countryside more real than any ever traversed by men or beasts: the countryside of what man at his best wants to be and wants to do.

And every one of us knows that, because those good companions galloped so bravely in a great song, many a living person has found courage to ride on humbler missions in a manner less spectacular yet every bit as admirable.

After The Plebiscite.

Prompt acceptance by the League Council of the Saar Plebiscite results is to be expected. The overwhelming majority for reunion with Germany, ruling not merely in the territory as a whole but also in every voting district, precludes the possibility of any other outcome.

The size of the majority, as pointed out by Mr. Lothrop Stoddard in an article on the page opposite this, is the more striking because of the hostility among many otherwise patriotic Germans created by the abuses of the Hitler regime. Without this factor, it is evident that the vote for reunion would have been virtually unanimous. As matters stood, less than one-half of one per cent of the qualified electorate expressed a preference for annexation to France, indicating the exaggeration of the claims to this territory put forward by Clemenceau at the Peace Conference.

German policy subsequent to this electoral triumph is now the major interest of European politics. Two diametrically opposite lines are possible, and it is certain that each will have its supporters within the Third Reich. By many the vote will be taken as an encouragement to Pan-Germanism. The desires of the Saarlanders, it will be said, are paralleled in Silesia, the Polish Corridor, Bohemia, Austria, Schleswig-Holstein and Alsace. It will be argued that Germans who have been separated from the Fatherland would, if given a free choice, vote with the unanimity that the Saar has shown for reincorporation. To work for such incorporation will seem to many Nazis almost a sacred duty.

The opposite alternative for German policy is fortunately the more probable. The Saar plebiscite is Germany's first clear-cut gain under the terms of the Versailles Treaty, and as a result is likely to encourage reconciliation with other territorial provisions of the treaty. Chancellor Hitler has promptly stated that the last outstanding issue between Germany and France is now settled, thus reaffirming the surrender of all claims to Alsace-Lorraine. The recent German-Polish treaty is further evidence that the Nazi regime is becoming much more realistic toward the irredentist problem.

All credit for this attitude, however, can not be attributed to German restraint. It is now apparent that the recent Franco-Italian agreement in behalf of Austrian neutralization had in mind the probable stimulation of Pan-Germanism through the Saar plebiscite, and the desirability of blocking this in advance.

Having taken this precautionary action, the French government has been quick to express official satisfaction at the outcome of Sunday's voting. The British are making their contribution to future stability by actively encouraging Germany to resume her membership in the League of Nations, a policy with which Foreign Minister Laval of France is sympathetic. All of the major league members would, of course, welcome Germany back to Geneva and the only obstacle from the league viewpoint is whether or not concessions should be granted to secure this end. It is not certain that France would agree to the sweeping elimination of the legal restrictions on German armaments which the British foreign office seems ready to indorse.

The acid test of future German policy will undoubtedly be provided by Berlin's reactions to these overtures for renewed league membership. For the only nations which have good cause to mistrust this international association are those which are unwilling to work out their foreign policy by conciliatory and cooperative procedure.

The League of Nations has accomplished its difficult task in the Saar plebiscite with a scrupulous fairness which must demand esteem in Germany as in all other countries. If Herr Hitler's fanaticism has been tempered by the responsibilities of office, as many circumstances indicate, it is to be expected that Berlin will follow the Saar triumph with a cancellation of its notice of withdrawal from league membership.

That notification, it is to be remembered, has until October to become effective. Technically, it is not yet a matter of renewing league membership, but merely of canceling a notice of withdrawal which is not yet operative.

Three Income Taxes.

The evils of duplicate taxation involved in the simultaneous imposition of State and Federal income taxes upon individuals and corporations have for some time given rise to serious problems regarding the proper coordination and allocation of revenues between taxing units.

Some experts advocate a separation of Federal and State sources of revenue to permit the Federal Government to preempt income taxes, leaving sales taxes to the States. Others favor Federal administration of income tax laws with a return of a portion of the proceeds to the States. In other cases, relief from duplicate or multiple taxation, whether of income or other revenue sources, is urged by allowing credits to persons paying Federal and State taxes on the same taxable resources.

With so many complicated issues of this sort resulting from duplicate taxation, it is most unfortunate that New York City should have voted to levy an income tax upon residents of the city, in order to provide funds for relief work. And it is not at all surprising to hear that the tax may be repealed before any collections have been made, if the new retail sales tax produces yields higher than anticipated.

While duplicate and multiple taxation is often unavoidable, especially under present conditions, when taxable resources are limited in relation to revenue needs, every effort should be made to reduce conflicts to a minimum and avoid that prevalent tendency to tax anarchy which is responsible for much injustice and constitutes a direct incitement to tax evasions, with resultant loss of revenue to all taxing units.

A New Role For RFC?

A broad question of policy is involved in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's proposal to extend its banking activities. Since the emergency which called the RFC into being has largely passed, it has been generally assumed that its activities would be curtailed and its holdings gradually liquidated. But Chairman Jones sees quite a different role ahead.

It is rare indeed that a Governmental institution established to serve a temporary need does not attempt to prolong its existence. Under this apparent stimulus of self-preservation, the RFC is trying to create for itself a new function. For several months its regulations for lending public funds have been undergoing a process of "liberalization." Instead of concentrating on the collection of loans made during the emergency of 1932 and 1933, Chairman Jones has placed his chief emphasis upon the relending of funds for industrial expansion. Obviously, if this policy is followed, the nature of the RFC will be substantially changed.

Under its new regulations the corporation will lend to industrial companies, even though a substantial portion of the fund is used to pay existing indebtedness of the borrower. It is difficult to see how industry could be substantially aided through a transfer of debts from private hands to the RFC, unless that institution is ready to assume excessive risks. Especially is this true at a time when a plethora of private credit is available to industry for financing sound enterprises.

The desirability of stimulating industrial activity, especially in the heavy goods industries, is not open to question. Everyone recognizes that this is prerequisite to any substantial reduction of unemployment. Since the necessity of some constructive move is apparent, it may be argued that liberal RFC loans are as desirable as a public works program to absorb the unemployed. In either case, however, the employment afforded would be largely artificial. And no one can foretell which method of creating it might ultimately be the more costly.

Public works do, however, afford a reasonably certain means of creating jobs. If they are carefully planned and administered the public is at least certain of obtaining some value in return for its expenditures. If RFC funds are to be used to refinance existing indebtedness, as well as to supply new industrial equipment, and if loans are to be made on risks that private capital will not take, the effectiveness as well as the soundness of Chairman Jones' proposal is open to question.

Meal Tickets.

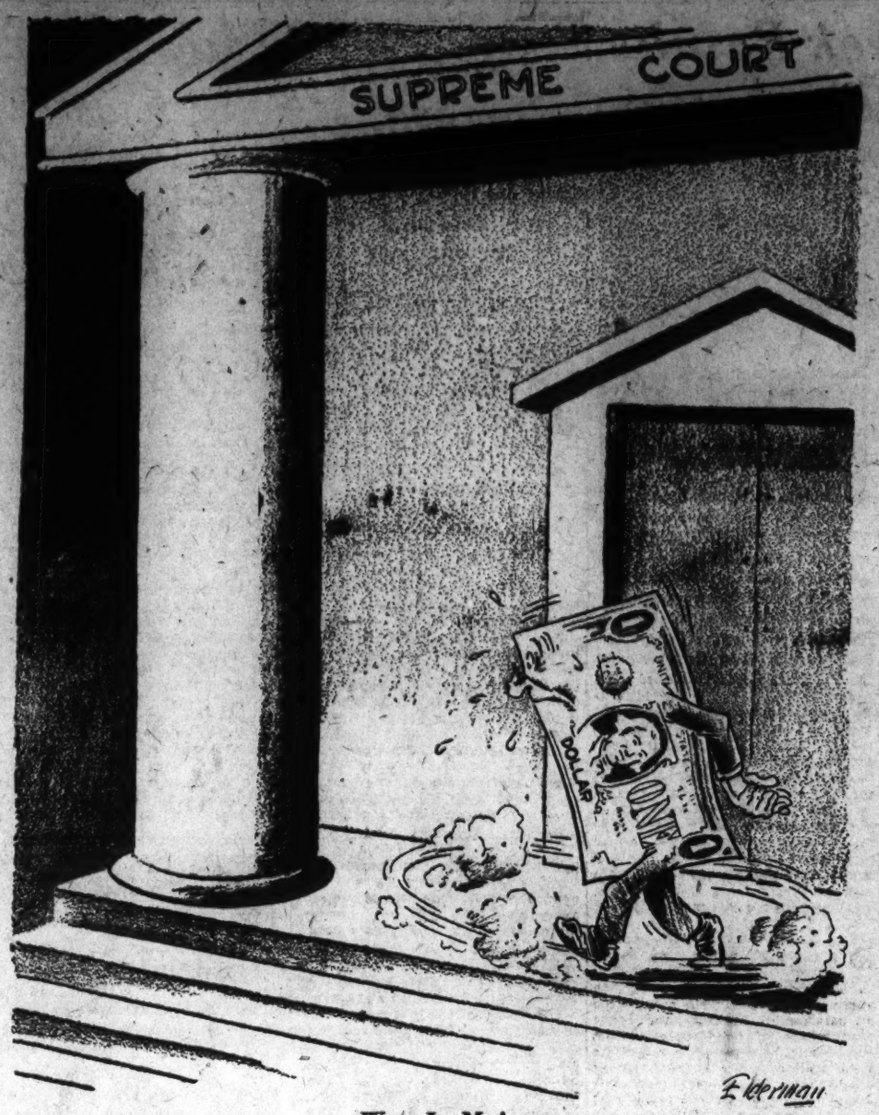
Yugoslavia is taking steps to remedy "bride snatching." It appears that this is an old south Serbian custom due to a lack of marriageable women in that area. On the other hand, marriageable men are scarce in neighboring Herzegovina. Therefore, a sort of "ladies exchange" has been set up by government officials for the purpose of transporting brides in job lots from Herzegovina to south Serbia, at greatly reduced prices. Under the new arrangement a bargain bride may be obtained at the nominal sum of $25, whereas home talent comes as high as $500 to $2,500.

It is only natural that the prospective bridegrooms should be delighted with the falling market price for wives. Too long now Herzegovina has had a corner on eligible women. So eager are the Serbs to take advantage of these new and unusual bargains that it is said no questions are asked about the past of the brides. The only stipulation is that they be healthy, romantic and willing to till their husband's land.

No lack of cooperation is to be found on the part of the girls. So anxious are some of them to leave paternal roofs that they are waiving dowry rights. The bridegrooms will probably interpret this eagerness as signifying that the girls fulfill the "romantic" requirements. But alas for romance! What the bridegrooms have forgotten is that not only is there a husband-shortage in Herzegovina but also a food shortage. And since it is a well-known fact that not even the very poorest go hungry in southern Serbia, one is left to draw his own unromantic, disillusioning conclusions!



Woe Is Me!

A Working Man On Social Justice.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In many propositions in this world we find that one man's loss is another's gain. This New Deal that we hear so much about these days, it seems to us, is one thing which, if fully developed, will be a benefit to all, rich and poor.

Through all times of which we have history, it has been the custom for anyone who acquired a quantity of this world's goods, whether it could be classed as money, personal property or real estate, to use it to hire others to labor for him in such a way as to increase the property owner's possessions at the expense of the laborer.

This practice has been so common for so long that many well-meaning persons have never stopped to consider that it might not be quite all right.

It seems to us that even the Almighty allowed it to continue, because in a way it helped to carry out one of His intentions for the children of men. Somewhere in the Bible God is quoted as saying words to this effect, "Increase ye, multiply, and fill the earth."

* * * *

Then this thing happened: In a community where there were a number of people, one or more of them, who by industry or good luck, acquired an amount of property in excess of what was needed to supply their immediate needs. By shrewdness and foresight they used this excess wealth to hire others to labor for them, and thus use a part, and usually a large part, of the product of this hired labor to increase their own wealth. By making the wages as small as possible and the hours of labor per day as many as possible, they acquired more and more of the property at hand and caused the work of only a part of the remainder of the people to produce the necessities for all, leaving the others without property or means of gaining a livelihood.

Thus, from the beginning were paupers produced. When the world was new and comparatively uninhabited, these poor people, or at least those that had enough ambition to want to be self-supporting, could simply get up and leave, and go to some other locality that had not been developed.

In this way, the class of people known as pioneers was developed. As these new communities were settled and enlarged, the same condition came about as in the locality from which the people had migrated.

And so this thing has continued for several thousands of years with many variations, such as the people of a number of localities banding together under some leader and forming a nation. Other communities, under other leaders, formed other nations.

* * * *

As these nations expanded and one nation came in contact with another, disputes arose and war ensued.

Often whole nations were driven from what they had come to look upon as their native land. Some nations were subjected to others and became slaves or were simply absorbed by the stronger nation. Through all this man, almost unknowingly, continued fulfilling God's command, "Increase, ye, multiply and fill the earth."

But something has gone wrong. This old system by which a few gain possession of nearly all of the wealth of the world and manipulate it in such a way that a part of the balance of the people must slave long hours for a meager existence, while others are denied even the chance to work for a living, doesn't seem to work out right any more. Why? Simply because the paupers produced have nowhere to go. Some other system must be developed and that is what we understand, or at least hope, is the objective of the New Deal.

As was stated before, God seems to have condoned this old system because, in a way, it helped to fulfill his object to have the children of men spread all over the earth. It would seem that in this respect this system has outlived its usefulness and He has put it into the minds of men to put an end to it and develop a new plan of existence.

Of course those who have been having the best of this old deal are loath to make any change.

But there must be a new deal. What is meant by a new deal? From what is the term, new deal, derived? We heard or read sometime ago that it was suggested by what is practiced by card players after a misdeal has been discovered. When it is discovered in a card game that the cards have been misdealt so as to give one player an unfair advantage over another or others, the cards are all assembled and redealt or, in other words, a new deal is called for.

It seems that in the division of the product of the combined efforts of labor and capital the latter has been getting the lion's share, and the only way to rectify the trouble is to change the ratio of the shares of capital and labor.

Another thing that has greatly complicated things in recent years is the wonderful development of machinery. In many lines this has reached a stage where one man, by the use of machinery, can do the work that a few years ago took a dozen or more men to accomplish. Does this benefit the laboring man? Not much. It usually puts a lot more of them out of work and develops the pauper class that much faster. The capitalist gets control of the machines and reaps the benefits, leaving the inventor in many cases with a very meager reward for his thought and labor.

While with half of our able-bodied men working what has been considered a reasonable portion of the time, it is now possible to produce enough to supply the necessities and luxuries for the entire population, there are many going cold, hungry and unsheltered or taken care of by charity. And why? Simply so that the rich may become richer. And what, just what, are they going to do with all this wealth? As we understand it, the boats that cross the River Stix are strictly passenger boats. No freight, no express, no mail, not even baggage is allowed in them. Even the passengers are so thinly clad that it is impossible to distinguish betwixt rich and poor.

* * * *

If the rich man can't take his wealth with him what does it profit him to acquire more than enough for his own sustenance and that of those dependent upon him? Leave it to his descendants? Who gets the more thrill out of life, the poor boy who has to work for a living or the rich, young beggar that never knows what it means to earn the price of a meal to satisfy his pampered appetite?

Well, what is the solution of the problem? Why just cut down working hours until each man needing to work would have a job, then increase wages until the capitalist profit would just pay him fair interest on the capital invested.

The rich are going to oppose this arrangement. They constitute about 10 per cent of our population. That would mean close to 13,000,000 people. Well, even Mr. F. D. R., we must concede, would find that some opposition.

Maybe it would be better to try to reason with these people. We said at the start that this proposition was to benefit all. Well, we have hinted pretty strong as to how it is to benefit the poor man, but where and how will it benefit the rich?

* * * *

There are two ways in which it may benefit the rich. In a material, and also, in a spiritual way. We must confess that from all appearances the rich are more interested in the material than the spiritual, so we will consider the material side first.

At the present time, or at least a short time ago, our population might have been divided into three classes, the rich, the labor class, and the unemployed. From what we read and hear it would not be far wrong to number these classes this way: Rich, 10 per cent; unemployed, 10 per cent. The other 80 per cent would include all who are self-sustaining either by physical or mental effort. Under the old system the unemployed class has a tendency to increase and, as they are getting more and more sympathy from the labor class, the time seems to be approaching when if something is not done there will be an uprising against the wealthy class as there was in Russia some years ago, and with the odds 9 to 1 against the wealthy class, it doesn't seem as though it would take a very shrewd person to forecast the results.

* * * *

So much for the material side. Now let us take a glance at the spiritual side. The Bible gives the experiences of two rich men, one of whom wanted to go to heaven, while the other did not seem to care. The first was the rich young ruler who came to Jesus to inquire how he might inherit eternal life. Jesus seems to have taken a liking for this young man and took some time to inquire into his morals and when he found that the young man had been obedient to the Decalogue He said, "One thing lackest thou, go sell all that thou hast and give to the poor and then come and follow me." Why did Jesus require this? We think just this: This wealth had been acquired by exploiting the poor and must go back to the rightful owners before the young man could be a fit candidate for heaven.

The other rich man was the one Jesus spoke of as disregarding the cries of the beggar Lazarus at his gate, until the poor beggar starved and died. Jesus goes on to say that afterward the rich man died also and went to hell. Jesus tells how the rich man in hell lifted up his eyes and saw Lazarus in heaven. He begged of the Lord to allow Lazarus to help him and failing in this asked that Lazaus be sent back to earth to warn the rich man's friends. In this he also failed.

Well, in the light of these two stories it looks as though it would be rather dangerous, both here and hereafter, for the wealthy to absolutely refuse to take any notice of this New Deal. The rich man has been asked once more to straighten up this matter with the poor. What will happen next? As the radio announcer says, listen at this time tomorrow or next week, next month or next year, or later, and find out.

MERLE HADSE.

The Post Impressionist

Investigate This Trust!

Post Office, Wednesday.

WE HAVE not received the following letter. Consequently, we take pleasure in publishing it without delay.

Dear Sir:

According to the excellent newspaper which employs you, Congress has this week vigorously started its real work. The Post states, and I am inclined to believe it, that our able lawmakers—having at last disposed of such minor matters as the election of a Speaker and the composition of committees—are now turning hopefully to weightier concerns of public welfare.

Mr. Elliott Thurston assures me that these concerns, as viewed by the Congress, fall, for the present, under three heads. He tells me that they are the soldiers' bonus, the proposal that the United States enter the World Court, and, finally, "a broad social program" outlined by His Excellency, the President.

The last-named item presents especial interest to me and should prove, I am convinced, of vital importance to nearly every other citizen of our country, if, at the Capitol, the breadth in question prove sufficiently elastic. It is of especial interest to me because—I frankly admit—I am a victim of the food-habit: when dyspepsia and depression permit me to do so, I eat. And I say that this same item should prove of vital importance to nearly every other citizen because, I understand, I am far from being alone in my usage: ninety-nine and nine-tenths per cent of our population cosumes food thrice a day—when it can procure the food.

Therefore, Sir, I sincerely hope that this new "broad social program" will prove latitudinarian enough to build, launch, navigate and at last bring home an investigation of the Lettuce Trust.

It will be useless, my dear Mr. Post-Impressionist, for any hired lobbyist or any Congressional partisan of the vested interests to pretend that a Lettuce Trust does not exist. Why, its existence assails all the senses! Legal evidences of the existence of the combination are everywhere obvious—and everywhere obvious are the evidences that it is a combination in restraint of selective eating.

Sir, you know the facts as well as I do:

Into no restaurant of this once-free country of ours—into no cafeteria, tea room, dining car or drug store—can a citizen go for any meal whatever (be it breakfast, luncheon, dinner, supper or a meal-between-meals) without having lettuce either forcibly or subtly served him. If you ask for a ham sandwich, you get a ham-and-lettuce sandwich. There is lettuce in 50 per cent of our soups that go by other names than lettuce soup. Of late, I have even seen lettuce served with the breakfast bacon. Revealed or concealed, those pale green leaves are in every course.

And, Sir, they are nearly always cowardly consumed. Occasionally, a customer is of strong enough character to draw or scoop out the unordered ingredient before eating the commanded plate. Far, far more often, however, the national dread of attracting attention, of creating a scene, of not doing what one is expected to do, compels submission. And in no case whatever have I seen a patron return the impertinently lettuce-draped viands to the kitchen for rectification.

I ask you, Sir: Can such prevalence of lettuce result from aught save trust methods? Can such constant attrition by such high-powered salesmanship be good for what remains of our rugged individualism?

I am not complaining of lettuce per se: I like lettuce—in lettuce salad. Lettuce has a distinct and respectable place in the daily menu—but it should be kept to its place.

And anyhow, Mr. Post-Impressionist:

We must remember those whose tastes differ from ours; we must respect their prerogatives. We should all recognize—especially should the law recognize—that there are hundreds of people (among them, defenseless children) who do not like lettuce anywhere. Yet, instead of recognizing those prerogatives and respecting those tastes, these nefarious operations are disregarding the one and flouting the other.

If that does not constitute an invasion of individual liberty, then the 18th Amendment was a second Bill of Rights! We overthrew a law which unsuccessfully attempted to keep us from certain drinks; are we to tolerate a trust that is successfully forcing upon us a certain food?

Sir, I urge that the Congressional inquiry be started without delay, continue without fears and conclude without favors. Let the just profits of the Lettuce Trust—if there are any—be protected, but let its unjust activities be curbed. Let the names of all officers in, and beneficiaries under, this traffic be exposed to the public view. And let legislation be immediately passed to protect its victims.

Unless action is drastic and speedy, we shall have a completely Nebuchadnezzarized country.

Yours, truly,

M. E. ATMAN.

30-Hour Week Results In Lower Production

Labor And All Classes Would Suffer Under Program Of Shorter Working Day.

By arrangement with the Brookings Institution, The Post is reprinting a pamphlet on the 30-hour week just published by that economic research organization. The third of three installments appears below.

By Harold G. Moulton and Maurice Leven.

WOULD the 30-hour week generate recovery? In addition to reabsorbing the unemployed, the shorter work-week, as we have seen, has come to be conceived as a means of increasing total purchasing power and thereby stimulating business revival. The argument, in brief, is that the increase in total pay roll disbursements would lead to increased purchases in trade channels, which would start the wheels of industry everywhere.

Conceding for the sake of argument that the purchasing power theory of business recovery is sound, we must, nevertheless, ask whether an expansion of purchasing power by means of the 30-hour week is a feasible means of accomplishing the desired result. It should be clear from the analysis already made that a 30-hour week would involve a simultaneous increase in wage rates and a decrease in productive efficiency. The volume of output would be declining at the same time that the payment of wages was increasing. This would perforce result either in bankrupting business or in a rise in prices more rapid than the expansion of pay rolls. If the former alternative resulted, we obviously would not have recovery, but rather greatly intensified depression. In the latter alternative the rapid advance in prices would nullify increasing money wages.

In considering the relation of a reduction in hours to recovery, the inflexible character of the 30-hour week must not be forgotten. Different lines of industry ordinarily have varying work schedules—adapted to the character of the labor involved, the arrangement of the machinery and the requirements of different processes of production. A rigid universal 30-hour week, or for that matter any other set number of hours, would put industry in a strait-jacket and reduce efficiency. Even though in time business might possibly accommodate itself to an inflexible working schedule, the immediate effect would unquestionably be to retard recovery.

IT is reasonably clear from the preceding paragraphs that a sharp increase in wages, accompanied by a decrease in average efficiency, would exert through increased costs a direct effect upon prices. Let us see just how great an increase in wage costs is implied. Under the NRA codes the average "standard week" in industry is about 40 hours. Assuming this standard to be the basis for computing weekly wages when the hours were reduced to 30, an increase in hourly rates of wages by 33 1-3 per cent would result. If, however, the measure were applied on the basis of the actual hours worked at the time it took effect the average increase in wage rates would be somewhat less. This is because the actual length of the working week for industry as a whole is now appreciably less than 40 hours.

It is unnecessary to speculate as to the probable effects of such an increase in wage costs upon prices—for we have before us the comparable experience of the NRA. A study which the Brookings Institution has made of the effect of wage increases upon prices since the establishment of the codes shows that the prices of manufactured commodities and the wage rates of the labor engaged in the production and distribution of these commodities had roughly an equivalent increase. Whether or not one thinks so extensive a rise in prices was warranted, it is none the less a fact; and it is a fact which has already apparently led to a material shift in point of view on the part of the Administration itself as to the practicability of the policies that have been pursued.

In the light of this experience, it would seem reasonable to believe that a further drastic curtailment of the working week would be followed by a commensurate increase in the prices of manufactured commodities. Indeed, in consequence of the decrease in average efficiency that would ensue, the rise in prices might well be more pronounced than was the case under the NRA codes.

It should be noted, however, that instead of recouping by means of an immediate rise in prices many business concerns might be confronted with serious immediate difficulties. In cases where prices could not be raised in anticipation of the increased costs, and where working capital is limited, it would be necessary to procure the funds with which to meet the enlarged pay rolls by means of bank loans or the flotation of securities. It is scarcely to be doubted that the difficulties encountered during the past year, particularly in small industries, in procuring the funds necessary for increased operating costs would be greatly intensified by the establishment of a 30-hour week.

ASSUMING that the 30-hour week could be installed on a national scale without throttling enterprise, it remains to trace its consequences. We shall consider first the effects upon various groups in the body politic, and, second, its relationship to other phases of national policy.

Wage earners: The 30-hour week has been advanced primarily in the interests of the laboring class as a whole. Let us, therefore, consider just how it would affect the wage earners. At first glance it would appear that, since there would be no cut in wages, the position of the worker who is employed would in no wise be impaired. The truth is, however, that his real wages would be appreciably reduced in consequence of the rise in prices. Everything that he purchased which was produced by industries operating on the 30-hour week schedule would, as we have seen, be substantially enhanced in price. Moreover, there would be a tendency, for reasons already indicated, to freeze standards of living at the reduced level.

The special effects upon different wage earners will depend upon the method used in establishing the plan. At present there is a great variation in working hours among individual employes, different plants and different industries. Thus, according to September, 1934, figures, the average in meat packing was about 43 hours per week, while in iron and steel it was less than 23 hours. If the measure were applied indiscriminately on the basis of the actual hours worked at the time it took effect, the workers in meat packing would obtain an average weekly wage based on 43 hours of work with added leisure of 13 hours, while those in iron and steel would presumably be left with average wages for a 23-hour week, with no possible increase of leisure.

• • • •

SALARIED and fixed income groups: It is not clear from current discussions whether the 30-hour week would be made applicable to individuals working on salaries in industry and other occupations. If it did apply to them they would be affected in much the same way as wage earners. They would have more leisure, but this would be at the cost of a lower real income. If the 30-hour week were not applied to this class, they would have the lower standards of living without an increase in leisure. Individuals living on fixed incomes would be adversely affected to the precise extent that prices rose.

Farmers: The 30,000,000 people constituting the agricultural population would likewise be adversely affected. It is hardly to be expected that those who are pressing for this measure contemplate a 30-hour week for the farmer. Although the farmer would thus not get any more leisure, he would find himself confronted with higher prices for all the commodities he has to purchase. The rise in prices would affect him both as a consumer and as a producer. The rise in his operating costs would reduce his money income and the purchasing power of this money income would also be curtailed as a result of the rising level of prices.

It should also be pointed out that certain types of industries would be adversely affected. Regulated industries, such as the railroads and public utilities, would be unable quickly to advance prices as wage rates and costs of production increased. In consequence, earnings would be naturally reduced; and in view of the slender margin of profits now existing we might well expect a new epidemic of bankruptcies. In any event, it would prevent such industries from contributing toward recovery by increased expenditures for replacements and new equipment.

CONSIDERATION must also be given to the possible effects of the 30-hour week upon the Government's program in general. Would it supplement other policies now being pursued, or would it tend to impede the national program of recovery?

First, the proposal obviously works at direct cross purposes with the Government's agricultural program. The effort is being made to bring about a better adjustment between agriculture and industry through raising the prices of farm commodities relatively to the prices of industrial products. If the 30-hour week were instituted, it would certainly defeat this objective.

Second, a 30-hour week would tend to impede international commerce at a time when the United States is making a renewed effort to expand foreign trade. At this very juncture we are entering into negotiations with various foreign countries with a view to consummating arrangements for reopening the channels of international commerce—as a means of promoting world recovery. A sharp increase in American wages would be accompanied by an immediate demand for higher tariffs as a means of protecting the American market from a vast increase in imports of cheaper foreign goods; and as a practical matter all chance of effecting any adjustment of tariff rates by negotiation would be gone. In any case, the rise in costs and prices would increase the difficulties of American manufacturers in finding outlets abroad. Such a policy would thus work against a growth of exports and the increase of employment connected therewith.

FINALLY, it should be noted that this program ignores the experience gained under the NRA—with reference to the control of purchasing power, the safeguarding of the position of smaller industries and the problems of regulation generally. In fact, the administration and enforcement of a 34-hour week for industry generally would present far more intricate and baffling problems of policing and control than any yet encountered.

In summary, this analysis of the economic effects of the 34-hour week clearly leads to the conclusion that the measure would not promote national welfare. It would prove detrimental to the interests of labor as well as other classes. It would not promote recovery and bids well to intensify the depression. At best its immediate effects would be a spread of employment at the expense of efficiency and productive output. In its long-run implications the measure offers to the workers of the country merely a choice between more leisure and a more abundant consumption of goods and services.

It goes without saying that it is the duty of the Nation to prevent want among the unemployed. But to seek this end by a compulsory reduction of the hours of work, which would freeze the possible volume of production below the level required to give all the people the abundance they desire is as short-sighted as it is lacking in understanding.

The World's Which?

ONE of the sweet little things up from the South whose husband is helping out the New Deal cautioned him when she first came here to tell her everything he heard about national politics and national affairs. She didn't want to become a stagnated wife, she said.

BARGERON.

So yesterday when he sidled up to her in the car he said airily:

"Well, I see the Senate has got the World Court up again."

"The world's which?" she asked.

And thereby the sweet little thing hit the nail upon the head. It is not so much the World Court as the World's Which the Senate has up. And as the World's Which it is likely to be handled.

• • • •

It may or may not be passed at this session. What is fairly certain is that passage was not the primary reason the Administration dragged it out. It dragged the issue out to bedevil the opposition, and one has only to see the excitement in the opposition camp to appreciate just what a good bedeviling job has been done. For the rest of the session this issue will get the undivided attention of Senators Borah and Johnson and Mr. Hearst. And what is important, it will require so much of their attention that they won't have time for anything else.

The strategy was not aimed particularly at Senator Johnson. He is a friend of the Administration and promised no trouble at all. Senator Borah had two or three things in mind, though. Particularly, he wants to do a job on the NRA. He will have to spend all of his time now watching the World Court.

• • • •

The most dramatic picture, though, is presented by Mr. Hearst. He has been consistently getting more critical and bitter toward the Administration. In recent weeks one would get the impression he had about exhausted his adjectives and expletives upon the Brain Trust, individually and collectively. There seemed only about two more editorials between him and a direct thrust at the President in whose nomination, the Hearst papers have recently pointed out, they were a "determining influence." Those who know the trends were convinced just where Mr. Hearst was headed.

But with the revival of the World Court he has dropped every other grievance, the Brain Trusters, the Administration's policies—everything but the World Court. One would think it is now his only concern in the world.

• • • •

The storm is raging solely in the opposition camp. On the Administration side there is not the slightest disturbance. Their equanimity gives additional weight to the belief that their purpose in bringing the issue up was more to occupy the time of certain gentlemen than to secure its passage. The strong impression is that they don't care in the slightest whether it really passes or not.

This does not mean that it may not pass. The Administration would just as soon pass it. They would much rather keep it dangling. The opposition knows this is the Administration attitude, too. But it is of no comfort. The fact is that if they lessen their vigil there is no question about its going through. In their watching they will have mighty little time to do anything else.

• • • •

There is another side to the matter, one which all Senate lovers should approve. The World Court, debating it from time to time, will tend to restore some of the Senate's lost importance. Once more it can seem to be big. For two years it has been passing bills sent down by the White House just as the House at the other end of the Capitol. For two years it has been but another rubber stamp. It will continue this session to be pretty much that but the occasional arguments on the World Court will make it seem big—yes, sir, the great deliberative body of old.

'The World Went Mad,' Says John Brophy's Heavy-Footed Novel on the Poor Old War.

By Theodore Hall.

I AM up on my tin ear today, thank you. Experience should have warned me to butter a blurb well and roll it in rock salt before taking. But indomitably fresh and perennial hope welled up in me as I glanced over the back jacket of John Brophy's novel, "The World Went Mad" (Macmillan, $2.50).

"It takes the breath away, brings tears, exhilarates and appeals," quoth James Agate, British reviewer. "A remarkable piece of work," cried L. A. G. Strong. And Miss Winifred Holtby, co-dedicatee with Miss Vera Brittain, exclaimed: "A beautiful and exciting achievement."

With an enthusiasm I can't explain now, I plunged in. On page 1, the fourth and fifth lines, I read this: "He locked the scrolled gates, his own handiwork, made 26 years before in the pride of his young manhood . . ."

Gentlemen, my listeners, that was enough! It was all there. Any novelist who allows himself such a phrase as "pride of young manhood" has a cliche mind, and no later scramblings are going to redeem it. Mr. Brophy's novel about the war and its impression on sundry people may be ingeniously constructed, but the basic materials are bromides, banalities, and soft, sweet fictional familiarities. I was not, as the Queen-Empress said, amused.

• • • •

Mr. Brophy lets some 40 short episodic chapters jump around from England to France to America to Egypt to the Near East, conveying mainly by indirection the effect which the Great Shambles had on everyone from profiteers to pilfering Arabs. The notion has a certain neatness. A vast dual of ground is covered, and many lives are looked into for a moment. The almost startling unoriginality of what was seen, though, comes out best in the main thread of the tale.

Bartholomew Crellin—the middle-aged iron worker who had that proud young manhood—lives in England with his nubile daughter and spry, jingoist young son. His wife is dead, and fairly often he thinks of her. More often, he casts back in his mind to the days when he was learning his craft in Germany, and a blonde siren named Gerda—one of those girls, you know, who represent "life"—gave him her all. So Mr. Crellin's mind is in a pretty pickle; he has to be reasonably patriotic, yet he abominates war, especially a war aimed at the scenes of his early romance.

Nevertheless, he lets daughter Eleanor marry young Julian Foss, about to go off to the front. (Yes, Crellin is surprised that his daughter has grown up. And yes, he advises her: "It's never wise to take risks; it's much less wise not to take them.")

Then the jumpiness sets in—petty politicians make a sharp profit on land; an army sergeant cusses out his men; a German medical orderly falls in love with a French girl; an artist is reduced to designing book jackets; the onlookers at the Roger Casement trial chat among themselves, and so on. The variety of subject is better than the meat.

• • • •

Back to the Crellin thread we go. Eleanor's husband, fighting in the Somme, has his life saved by a German. Then the German is killed. Now just guess who the German was! Grade B wits will know he was the medical orderly, turned fighter, mentioned already. Grade A wits, pretty well up on their British novelists, will jump to the fact that he is the son of Crellin and the fabled Gerda.

The wits score bull's-eyes, and our novelist-in-hand a clean miss.

Dear me, does it have to be mentioned that there is a childbirth scene—with Eleanor philosophizing, using good grammar in medias res, and observing that she is a pawn of nature and a mere machine of maternity? Or that there is a trench scene in which one man, talking just now as alive as you please, is killed in the next instant? Or that Eleanor's husband, convalescing on special duty in Egypt, has an interlude with a local charmer?—who says: "I am an artist; I need love" and who is the daughter, naturally of an old German friend of Crellin's, thus proving that the world is a small place. Or that Eleanor's husband is killed in the next chapter but one? Ah, the implacable fate a novelist wields!

• • • •

As last cliche, I give you the title—"The World Went Mad." It holds all the armchair insight and the easy and obvious dramatics which mark the rest of the book.

Even the tale's best chapter—a pretty gorgeous melee of an English mob ransacking the shop of a German sympathizer, full of genial Billingsgate and hair-pullings—does not reduce my present fever of queasiness over Mr. Brophy and his English reviewers.

I HAVE received an interesting letter from Mrs. W. R. Plum, of Washington, D. C., in which she says "There are frequent publications of lists of Best Books, Forgotten Books, for Desert Island Reading, and so on. I should like to see a list of first-class light novels which either did not receive due attention when published or which have been forgotten in the whirl of newer publications—the sort of books a tired but intelligent business man might enjoy. May I start such a list with a few of my own favorites? There are as many people who look for relaxation and recreation in their reading as those who look for intellectual enjoyment. Why not start such a list in your column and let others contribute?"

Racial Bond Explains Saarlanders' Decision

Although Territory Will Lose Economic Advantages Return To Germany Is Preferred.

By Lothrop Stoddard

(Special Correspondence of The Post).

THE results of the Saar plebiscite may be regarded as striking evidence of a fundamental difficulty in the ordering of world affairs on a thorough-going efficiency basis. Framers of plans for a stable world-order are apt to believe that these will be decided on their abstract merits; that if they are economically sound and politically sensible, their eventual acceptance is assured.

This, however, assumes that men are at heart canny and wise, whereas history proves emphatically that they are not. By and large, mankind is basically emotional, and as such is swayed primarily by emotions like enthusiasm, beliefs and prejudices. Unless we recognize this truth and make due allowances for it, our best-laid plans will go awry and our fondest hopes come to naught.

Consider the question of the Saar from a purely objective and dispassionate angle. This densely populated, highly industrialized region, smaller than Rhode Island and with nearly a million inhabitants, was politically detached from Germany by the Treaty of Versailles and passed under the temporary control of the League of Nations, acting as trustee until the sovereignty of the territory should be determined by a free vote of the Saarlanders themselves in a plebiscite to be held in 1935.

Let us see what this treaty provision meant to the people of the Saar. Politically, they ceased to be German, coming under the authority of an international organization. Economically, the Saar remained united with Lorraine, whose iron ore, wedded to Saar coal, had formed the basis of a flourishing industrial development while both regions had been parts of the pre-war German Empire. Furthermore, by being included within the French tariff wall, the whole French market was opened to Saar coal and other products.

FOR the Saarlanders, the advantages of these economic arrangements were enormous. France is poor in coal, so its expanding industry guaranteed the profitable exploitation of the Saar's one source of natural wealth. Germany, on the other hand, has abundant coal fields much nearer its industrial centers. Sundered from Lorraine iron ore and cut off from the French market, the Saar would face the prospect of economic stagnation.

This long-range factor was reenforced by the trend of events. Having become economically part of France, the Saar escaped the woes suffered by post-war Germany which culminated in boundless inflation. The Saarlanders, using French francs, did not see their money vanish into thin air with the debasement of the German mark. French capital poured in to quicken and stabilize the Saar's industrial life. Indeed, the Saarlanders were better off than were the French themselves, since they did not have to pay French taxes or assume any of the military burdens which Frenchmen were called upon to bear.

In fact, the Saarlanders were among the best governed and certainly the least expensively governed, of any European people. So far as honesty and efficiency are concerned, the League of Nations administration, in spite of some bad initial mistakes, had an excellent record. The Saar has come through the entire post-war period with very low taxes, has enjoyed good public services, such as schools, police protection and sanitation, and yet has been kept free from debt. Immune from military service or the weight of armaments and reaping the benefits of exceptionally favorable industrial and financial conditions, the inhabitants of the Saar might, objectively, have deemed themselves in a uniquely happy situation.

• • • •

ASSUMING that the Saarlanders were basically guided by a shrewd and calculating self-interest; that is to say, assuming them to be what classical economists deemed the average man was like, would it not be reasonable to suppose that a majority of the population would desire to perpetuate these blessings by voting to remain under the League of Nations? That was all they needed to do. France would have been only too glad to continue the existing economic situation, while it was virtually certain that, once sovereignty over the Saar had been definitely vested in the league, the Saarlanders would receive a very large measure of local autonomy. From the standpoint of material self-interest, could there be more than one answer?

Yet that answer was not given, because more than mere material factors were involved. Those factors are well summed up in the words of an old Saarland woman, reported in a recent press dispatch. Said this venerable dame: "I was born a German and a German I want to die!"

That settled the matter so far as she was concerned. Political reunion with Germany might spell economic depression, high taxes, bad business or loss of jobs for her sons, conscription and death on the battlefield for her grandsons. Never mind. She wanted to be German; to become again a citizen of the Reich—even the Third Reich; to share in a mystic union with and devotion to the Fatherland. Even though the material price to be paid was regrettably high, it was spiritually worth-while. In short, emotional considerations prevailed. And what was true of her was equally true of the great bulk of her neighbors.

• • • •

THE Saarlanders are not a peculiar people. In their verdict on Sunday they typified human reactions to similar circumstances everywhere. Almost any group with a well-marked national or racial feeling, an historic culture and traditional loyalties, would decide in much the same fashion. From a technical standpoint, the administration of the Saar by the League of Nations has been a great success. As already remarked, it was developing into a highly honest, efficient, benevolent government. But it was an international government. And the Saarlanders wanted a government distinctly nationalist in character. Since they were not, and could not conceivably become a nationality by themselves, even the grant of full autonomy by the league would not have remedied the situation.

In other words, the Saarlanders had no desire to turn themselves into a second Luxemburg. They felt themselves German, and they longed to be Germans. So the neutral league officials, for all their administrative virtues, never won the hearts of the people; never awakened any loyalty to a league allegiance. The Saarlanders accepted all the benefits of international control without a word of thanks or any sense of gratitude. On the contrary, they deemed themselves martyrs to an unjust treaty which had torn them from their homeland, and they counted the years until they should be given the chance to vote themselves back into the family circle.

Those are stubborn facts which must be pondered by international planners everywhere. No scheme for world-governance will get far until it succeeds in awakening enthusiasms comparable to the loyalty and devotion now aroused by the sentiments of race and nationality. Arguments addressed to men's minds, no matter how sound and logical, will not suffice. Men's hearts must be touched as well. For

Battlefield Park To Be Beautified With Wildflowers

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—The spot of ground in the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Military Park, where Gen. Stonewall Jackson was mortally wounded by his own men in May, 1863, is to be one of the most beautiful places in the battleground area through the planting there of every kind of wild flower growing in this section of Virginia.

In the immediate section of the monument which marks the spot where Jackson fell and along nearby park roads for some distance, these wildflowers gathered by members of the Citizens Conservation Corps at work in the park will be transplanted. A tag bearing the flower's popular and botanical name will be placed on each flower for identification.

The place, though known as the Jackson Memorial Wildflower Preserve, will also be a memorial to the soldiers of the Union and Confederate armies, who fought stubbornly for this ground.

Two More Experts Trace 14 Ransom Notes to Hauptmann

Thumbguard "Rust" Dispute Witness Called

Manufacturer Hits Defense Contention; Swears It Resists Elements.

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 15 (AP). New Jersey called more handwriting authorities today in its endeavor to tie Bruno Richard Hauptmann to the strange ransom notes penned by the kidnaper of the Lindbergh baby.

Assistant Attorney General Joseph A. Lanigan called John F. Tyrell, of Milwaukee, as the first witness.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. Milwaukee, Wis.

Q. Your occupation? — A. Examiner of questioned documents.

Q. What part of your time do you devote to the examination of questioned documents? — A. All my working hours.

Q. Have you examined the ransom notes, the request writings, and the conceded writings (of Hauptmann)?—A. Yes.

Q. What was you purpose?—A. To determine whether or not there was an identity existing between them.

Q. What is your opinion on the ransom writing and the Hauptmann writings?—A. That the writing is identical. They were all written by the same person.

Woman Juror Bored.

Q. Now, Mr. Tyrell, proceed with your explanation—A. Parts of some of the notes are disguised, as is evidenced by the change in writing.

Point by point the witness covered the points brought out by the two previous State experts, tracing the similarities and peculiarities which he found in both the Hauptmann and ransom writings.

Another batch of photographic exhibits was given to the jury to demonstrate the similarities of the Hauptmann and ransom writings. Tyrrell traced more letters on his easel, and Juror No. 3, Verna Snyder, yawned without restraint.

Hauptmann had crossed his legs and stared blankly ahead.

Mrs. Hauptmann had difficulty in keeping her eyes open. Once or twice her head nodded.

Col. Lindbergh was, as he is always, intensely interested in the proceedings.

The attorneys at the prosecution table were interested.

C. Lloyd Fisher, of defense counsel, stared dreamily. Edward J. Reilly gave the impression of getting ready for the cross-examination.

Tyrrell turned at one time to the resemblance between the ransom and request writings.

"The two writings, when placed side by side, do not seem to have any pictorial similarity," he said, adding that a close examination, however, disclosed marked resemblance among the various letters.

The expert caused something of a stir when he declared:

"There is pictorially a greater difference between various sections of the dictated writing than there is between the ransom notes and sections of the dictated writing."

Cites Condon Address.

"There is one other matter I would like to call attention to," the expert said. "That is the address on the little package that was directed to 'Dr. John E. Condon.'"

He looked at a photograph and corrected himself.

"Mr. Condon, that is. There is an 'M-R.'"

He wrote against the easel: "Mr. Condon, 2974 Decatur Ave., New York."

"That," he explained, "was written in script."

He pointed out several similarities.

"'Avenue,' the word 'Avenue,' was an exact duplicate on his motor license card.

"'New York' is the same as in the license.

"Now in one of the Hauptmann writings I found the name Connelly strangely resembling the Condon."

Q. From your examination of the conceded writings the request writings and the ransom writings, can you say positively who wrote the ransom notes.—A. I think so.

Q. Then state it.—A. The writer is identical if Bruno Richard Hauptmann wrote the Hauptmann writings, he also wrote the ransom notes.

This closed direct examination.

Pope Cross Examines.

Frederick A. Pope, of defense counsel, cross-examined:

Q. How long have you been engaged in the examination of disputed documents?—A. The difference between 1883 and 1934. My first case was in 1891.

Pope directed the witness to the first ransom note.

Q. Do you think the writer attempted to disguise his hand?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you say it was written with the left or right hand?—A. I couldn't say. Who would I ask?

Q. Did you notice any marked difference between the first ransom note and those received later by Dr. Condon?—A. Yes.

Q. How were the later ones different?—A. They were less violent in expression, in words and in lines.

Q. Could some of these notes have been copied?—A. If they were, the copier had the same way of writing.

Q. I don't mean forgery, tracing or imitating. I refer more to copying from a set.—A. I don't know——

Q. What I mean is this. Besides malformation of letters, what other forms of handwriting disguise are used?—A. Well, I don't know exactly. It depends on the disguiser.

Q. Now you say the "d" is disconnected frequently?—A. Yes.

Q. Is this one disconnected?—A. No.

Q. The next "d"?—A. Yes, that is connected.

Q. The next?—A. That is connected.

Q. The next?—A. That is a "t."

Q. You say it looks like a "t," but it is meant to be a "d." It reads "D-e-a-r s-i-r," does it not?—A. That's right.

Q. In these instances, the connection of the "d" are marked dissimilarities, are they not?—A. Yes.

Q. The "f" in "afary" (presumably meaning "every")—that is different, isn't it?—A. Well, I wouldn't say that——.

Q. Well, it's dissimilar?—A. Yes, it's dissimilar.

Q. You illustrated the word "child," but you didn't have it on your chart?—A. No, I didn't.

Q. Now, I want you to compare that "i" with the final "d" in the word "Richard," as it appears on the automobile license.—A. Yes, I'll do that.

The expert said he recognized a dissimilarity. He went to the easel, and with the defense counsel at his side began a lengthy explanation of his findings.

Police Duress Hinted.

Pope hinted at the defense plans that Hauptmann would say police had forced him to include in the request writing the peculiar characters and misspelling found in the ransom notes.

Q. You did not know what instructions were given the writer when he wrote that dictation?—A. No.

Pope asked the chirographer to look at the next chart showing the corporative forms of ransom and Hauptmann writings.

Q. Now on this exhibit, I understood you to direct attention to the small letter "D" you did?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, referring to the word, "Did," you say it looks like "t-i-d?" A. No. I said "T-i-t."

Q. You assume however that the three letters there were meant to be "D-i-d?"—A. Presumably.

Q. And in some cases the "D" did not look like a "T?"—A. Yes.

Q. Now if you will look at the "H's" on this note, the writer did not experience in this instance the difficulty that he seemed to have in forming the "H's?"—A. No.

Q. You directed attention to the word "not," which was spelled, "n-o-t-e?"—A. Yes.

Q. Did you notice anything very singular about that?—A. Yes. The misspelling "n-o-t-e" instead of "n-o-t."

Q. Don't you think that might have been done by the author to camouflage his identity?—A. No, I don't think so.

Q. And what makes you think it (the word "note") was an unconscious, incorrect spelling?—A. Because of its phonetic value.

Pope asked him to explain, and Tyrrell pointed out that in German the word "not" would be pronounced almost as "note."

Q. Then it is your opinion that the ransom notes and other exhibits were probably written by a person of German extraction?—A. Yes.

Q. Now the letter "e" has the tendency to represent the "i" rather than the "e" in the dictated note, does it not?—A. In one instance.

Q. In one, two, three, four, five, six instances on this chart?—A. You mean that it is a compressed "e?"

Q. Yes, elongated like "l." Pope next turned his attention to the little "n."

Q. Do you think there is any similarity between the "n" in this exhibit and the first in this exhibit?—A. It is another type of "n."

Q. And the ransom note "n" is different from anything else in the exhibit?—A. Yes, different from anything else in the exhibit.

The ransom note and the Hauptmann writing habit of writing "New York" as a hyphenated word next engaged Pope's attention.

"I Live in Wisconsin."

Q. I believe you said that was to your opinion significant?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever seen it written that way?—A. No, I have never seen it written that way. Of course I live in Wisconsin.

Everybody laughed at this answer.

"A Boy's Game."

On one exhibit, where the name and address had been removed, the expert balked at identifying the nationality of the handwriting from what remained on the envelope.

"This," he protested, "is like a game you play when a boy; 'cover up a part and guess the rest.'"

Pope withdrew the question after Attorney General Wilentz interposed an objection.

The lawyer then handed him a typewritten envelope sent from Europe. The word "New York" was hyphenated, the chirographer said, but stressed that it had been made with a typewriter.

Q. Typewriters make a hyphen, do they not?—A. It depends on the operator.

More laughter.

Pope recalled Tyrrell's attention to the uncrossed "t's" and undotted "i's."

Q. Would it indicate that the writer might forget to dot his "i's" and cross his "t's" when suffering from fright?—A. It might.

Q. Do you think that the writer might have sought to disguise his handwriting by misusing words purposely?—A. I do not.

Q. Might it be that the writer would disguise it in that way to camouflage his identity?—A. I don't think so.

Q. I didn't ask you what you think. I want to know could that happen?—A. I will tell you only what I think.

Q. Can you point out that "best dank," meaning "best thanks" to me?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that it?—A. Here it is, "best dank," it is appended to the note: "For information about it we are interested to send your baby back in god health."

Disguised Identity.

Q. Have you never had an instance of disputed handwriting in which the writer has attempted to disguise his identity by misuse of letters?—A. Yes.

Q. That being so, it is possible the writer of this case might possibly have attempted to disguise his identity by misuse of letters?—A. No. In my opinion it occurs too naturally. In my opinion these are accidental inclusions.

Pope pressed the contention that the errors which appear in the ransom notes were made purposely for the intention of disguise.

He asked the witness to indicate any foreign words in the ransom notes, and seemed a bit taken aback when Tyrrell answered there were several.

The expert named as the first the use of the German "uns" for the English "us."

Pope called attention to the rhetoric of the letter, which he termed "splendid."

There was a heated dispute as Attorney General Wilentz sought to end the questioning.

"You will have to point out," Wilentz argued, "the poor spelling throughout."

"We are willing to admit that all these mistakes were made for purposes of disguise," Pope said.

Pope proceeded to draw the jury's and the witness' attention to how the ransom notes used "may" correctly, instead of "can," how they carried the word "packet," and other expressions which an educated man might use.

He also referred to the expression "in hand," and inquired if the expert did not consider that a clew that the writer was a business man.

It could be seen Pope was driving away at Fisch, the business man.

Tyrrell replied that in his opinion the phrase "in hand" was the equivalent of the German "in hand." He said the expression might be picked up readily.

"Frankfurter" Debate.

Q. You have the word "n-o-t-e" for "not?"—A. Yes.

Q. In the next line you have "t-o-o" for "too dangerous," haven't you?—A. No.

Q. What does it look like to you?—A. "T-t-o," it looks like to me.

Q. Then there is the phrase, "Dr. Condon may," doesn't that seem like unusually good English? He did not use "can."—A. No, it is usual.

Q. How does he spell the word "frankfurter" there in "frankfurter stand?"—A. F-r-a-n-k-f-u-r-t-h-e-r.

Q. And that is a German word is it not?—A. "Frankfurter" is.

Q. Doesn't it seem odd that a German might spell "frankfurter" wrong?—A. That is "frankfurther" not "frankfurter."

Q. Don't you think he meant "frankfurter?"—A. The word means Frank go farther."

Q. As a hand writing expert of years and years of experience does it not seem rather odd to you that the word, "not," probably the first the writer learned to spell, is misspelled "N-O-T-E?"—A. Well, it might be.

Q. Then he spelled correctly the word, "hazardous?"—A. Yes.

The witness was quick to point out that the word "too" which preceded "hazardous" was spelled "to."

Q. May it not indicate an effort to disguise his handwriting?—A. No.

Degree of Intelligence.

Tyrrell was asked to read from one of the ransom notes:

"We can't do it other ways because we don't like to give up our safety please or to move the baby."

Q. Don't you think that that shows some intelligence?—A. Some degree of intelligence.

He was asked to read again from the ransom notes, and again Pope asked:

Q. Is that note the note of the educated business man?—A. Yes.

Here Wilentz leaped up and demanded "Your honor, if counsel insists on injecting into the record his belief that these are the letters of an intelligent business man, I also want it on the record that in our opinion they are the letters of a kidnaper to the baby's father."

"Your honor, I ask that the attorney general's remarks be removed from the record and that the jury be instructed to disregard them," Pope said.

The court complied.

Pope called to the expert's attention his "identification" of one defendant, George Morgan, of Milwaukee, Wis., as a guilty writer of forged notes.

Q. And he was convicted, wasn't he?—A. Yes.

Q. And the next day another party confessed?—A. Yes.

Q. And that was a pretty serious mistake on your part, was it not? A. Well, the two occupied the same cell. There has always been some little doubt in my mind about it.

Lanigan asked only one question in redirect. It was whether the witness was still convinced Hauptmann was the ransom note writer.

"Yes," was the positive answer.

Another Expert Called.

Herbert J. Walter, of Chicago, another chirographer, was called.

"In my opinion, the same person who wrote the conceded Hauptmann handwriting is the same person who wrote the ransom notes," Walter said under questioning by Lanigan.

The expert turned to a large photographic enlargement of specimens. He said that in reaching his conclusions in the case he took into consideration the fact "a writer doesn't always write the same and may be attempting to disguise his hand."

"My opinion," he said, "is that the writing in the ransom notes is an attempt at disguise.

"My opinion is not based on one characteristic alone," he added.

He took a pointer and began examination of the two sets of handwriting on the chart.

He professed to find similarities in almost every word.

"This will show that the writer has the ability to change easily the direction and slant of the writing," he said, pointing to the ransom note "the" and the conceded "the."

The slant of the two words differed.

Egbert Rosecrans, of the defense counsel began.

Q. Writing shows characteristics.—A. Yes.

Q. I suppose it's rather simple to copy characteristics?—A. Have you ever tried it?

Q. If a clever German copyist had the materials to write he would be able to imitate Hauptmann's handwriting?—A. As in these ransom notes?

Q. Yes.—A. I think it would be impossible.

Q. Do you think that some of this writing might be duplicated?—A. In a line or two, yes. But in 14 notes, some of them of two pages, it would be impossible.

Thumbguards Studied.

Henry Maish, an Ohio thumbguard manufacturer, was called.

He testified that the "Baby Alice" type of thumbguards would not rust if permitted to lie for a long while in the roadway, as did that worn by the Lindbergh baby at the time of the kidnaping.

He was questioned briefly by Attorney General Wilentz on the thumbguard's construction.

Defense Counsel Reilly spoke in court for the first time today when he cross-examined the thumbguard manufacturer.

Reilly asked what firms manufactured thumbguards.

Q. What tests did you make to see that it would result in no rusting?—A. I wore it for a period of time. It didn't corrode.

Q. Because it didn't turn green on your finger, you will state that it would not rust?—A. Yes.

Q. You didn't leave it on a New Jersey road in March, 1932, to see if it would corrode?—A. No.

Q. Were you looking for an ad for your thumbguard, when you came here to testify?—A. I was not.

Court adjourned a few minutes later at 4:33 p. m.

Experts on Stand Bore Hauptmann

Talks to His Wife While Notes Are Analyzed.

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 15 (AP).—Bruno Richard Hauptmann paid little attention today while his attorneys fought to break down the contention of the prosecution that he wrote the Lindbergh kidnap-ransom notes.

A third day of the technicalities of the formation of words and letters in the ransom notes and in his own writings, displayed as "standards" of comparison, was too much for the German carpenter. His interest sank to zero, but his counsel hammered on in cross-examination at the State's experts.

Several times Hauptmann and his wife engaged in conversation, leaning across two guards.

"We didn't talk about the writing," she said later. "We talked about our baby."

Girl's Body Found Frozen on Beach

Death of Actress Was Suicide, Police Say.

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—Stretched out in a mink coat, the body of Lillian Kolker, 40, a pretty former show girl, was found today on a Brooklyn beach, sheeted in ice.

The divorced wife of Henry Kolker, Hollywood motion picture actor and director, was called a suicide by police, although an autopsy had not yet been performed, because the body was frozen by the wind-whipped spray of sea water. Buried in the sand a few feet from the body, police found a small bottle of whisky in which was mixed an unidentified solution.

Police expressed the belief the woman intended to plunge into the ocean, slipped on the ice and froze to death. Her body will be examined for traces of poison.

Flier's Widow Killed By Fumes From Fire

Glendale, Calif., Jan. 15 (AP).—Mrs. Mary D. Frye, 35, widow of Robert Frye, pilot of the passenger plane that crashed in 1931 carrying Knute Rockne, Notre Dame football coach, to his death, was killed today by fumes from a small fire that started in the living room of her home here.

Mrs. Frye's body, fully clothed, was found on her bed. Under it were her two pet dogs, also suffocated. Police reported they believed the fire had started accidentally from a cigarette dropped on the davenport.

Fire Kills 3 Children.

Easton, Pa., Jan. 15 (AP).—Three children—the oldest 3 years, the youngest three months—burned to death today in a fire which destroyed the frame rebuilt barn in which they lived with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rudy, at Glendon, three miles southwest of Easton.

West Virginia Faces Squalls In Legislature

House at Odds on Liquor Control; Senate Differs on New Deal.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 15 (AP).—Storm signals flew over both branches of the Legislature tonight—the House anticipating differences on liquor control, the Senate on blanket endorsement of President Roosevelt's policies. At the same time Gov. H. G. Kump prepared to request an extension of the time for submission of the budget setting out State expenditures for the next two years.

The budget is required by the Constitution to be submitted within 10 days after the Legislature convenes "unless such time is extended by the Legislature." It ordinarily is the last major bill considered at each session.

The Senate, were at odds over a suggestion that Roosevelt's program be endorsed in its entirety.

"I endorsed the President and his policies insofar as they have been made known, but I do not think that we should go on record until we have had a chance to study the contents of this resolution," said Senator Alvin J. Barnhart (Democrat), Kanawha.

He led opposition to immediate passage of a resolutoin indorsing the President offered by Senator J. Patrick Beacom (Democrat), Cabell. Beacom sought unsuccessfully to forestall shunting of the resolution to committee by a vote of 17 to 13. The liquor problem arose again in the House over what type of control laws shall govern sale of liquor after repeal becomes effective March 1.

Appointment of House committees by Speaker John J. Pelter put the House in position to go ahead with consideration of legislative problems. The chairmanship of the fiduciary committee—which carries with it floor leadership—went to W. N. Lafon (Democrat), Monroe; to James Kay Thomas (Democrat), Kanawha, went the leadership of the powerful finance committee.

State Hides Four to Explode 'Fisch Myth' of Hauptmann

sought to lay the groundwork for its theory that the furrier wrote the ransom notes, in questions asked both experts.

Walter was handed a letter and Egbert Rosecrans, defense counsel, asked him if the writer was "a good penman."

The witness said he was "pretty good" and Rosecrans asked if he noted that "it is the handwriting of Isador Fisch."

"I see a name 'Isador' and below, 'I. Fisch, Leipzig,' in the lower left corner," said Walter.

The German witnesses are Isador's brother, Pincus, his sister, Hannah; Pincus' wife, Czerna, and Minna Stegnitiz, the nurse who was with the frail furrier when he died in Germany last March.

With associates of the little man and others who knew him in this country they will be ready to bolster the State's contention that Fisch was innocent.

Vow to Clear Fisch.

"We are prepared to tell Fisch's life from 'A' to 'Z,'" said one of the prosecution staff, "and show he had no connection with the kidnaping."

However, Attorney General David T. Wilentz declined to discuss the German relatives or to say where they will stay prior to their testimony—probably on State's rebuttal at the close of the trial.

All were brought back to this country by Detective Arthur Johnson of the New York police, who investigated Hauptmann's criminal record in Germany and also looked into the movements of Fisch.

They were slipped aboard the Coast Guard cutter Raritan just as the liner dropped anchor at Quarantine. Customs and immigration officials who met the ship gave them a quick examination and release.

Setting a course for Brooklyn, the cutter landed the party at a pier on that shore. Transferred quickly to a motor car, the witnesses were driven away to an unannounced destination.

Throughout the voyage, passengers said, the four were shielded from contact with other persons by Detective Johnson. They ate at secluded tables and talked only in German, avoiding any deck conversation.

When the witnesses were taken aboard the cutter the women rushed down the improvised gangplank and into the Raritan's cabin, shielding their faces.

The detective, carrying a briefcase, followed. Pincus Fisch, also hiding his face in the collar of his coat, brought up the rear.

Late in the afternoon Detective Johnson arrived in court and took a seat next to the alert Lindbergh. The German witnesses were nowhere in evidence.

Another witness whom the State may use in its expose of what it calls the "Fisch myth," is Louis Blitzer, New York attorney.

Blitzer said Hauptmann came to him last June, three months before his arrest, and sought entry to Fisch's safe deposit box, claiming his former business associate had gone to Germany owing him $14,000. Blitzer, a lodge brother of Fisch, said he knew nothing of such a box.

Suspect Alibi Attempt.

The prosecutors indicated they believed Hauptmann was attempting to build up an alibi at that time. When he was arrested, he said he had found something more than $14,000 in ransom bills in the shoebox that Fisch left him.

Other developments outside of court today:

At York, Pa., Arthur P. Myers, who with Samuel C. Malone quit the defense staff of handwriting experts, declared the action was taken "because our findings were not favorable to the defense."

The New Jersey State Senate, moving to preclude any possibility of a mistrial, hastened confirmation of the appointment of Justice Thomas W. Trenchard, presiding at the Hauptmann trial. His present term expires Saturday.

The appellate division of supreme court in Brooklyn, although reserving decision on the appeal of Hauptmann's attorneys for access to data on the case, indicated it would favor the Bronx carpenter. The data now is in the hands of James M. Fawcett, former attorney for Hauptmann, who retained it as security for counsel fee payment on a supreme court order.

Police Smash Door, Raid Gambling Den

Phones, Other Devices Are Seized in F St. Raid.

Battering down a barred door on the second floor of a building in the 900 block of F street northwest, Lieut. George Little's vice squad late yesterday raided a well-equipped gambling establishment and confiscated numerous telephones and gaming devices.

The gambling quarters were on the second and third floors of the structure. Officers were carrying a warrant for a "well-known Washington gambler," they said.

On the first floor they found 13 patrons who were clustered around a blackboard on which were scrawled racing results. On the third floor 14 additional patrons were trapped. The quarters were equipped with a radio. There were six phones on the first floor and two on the third. No arrests were made.

Churches Extend Attendance Drive

Martinsburg Campaign Will Continue to Easter.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—The Ministerial Association, encouraged by the success of their combined effort Sunday in a "Go-to-Church Sunday" movement, yesterday voted to continue the campaign in churches of the city until Easter.

All churches reported an increased attendance Sunday, not only at services, but at Sunday school as well. The association will meet weekly instead of monthly throughout the campaign.

An exceptional attendance throughout the week also was reported for the united week of prayer last week.

Along the Tri-State Trail

Post State Editor

RECENT Governmental renovating of prominent historical spots has in many cases unearthed facts long covered by the mustiness of time.

While registering the graves of soldiers in Somerset County, Pa., information concerning a loan George Washington received to pay his troops, which was never repaid, came to light. The loan, with interest, now amounts to approximately $1,000,000. The claimant is William DeHaven, who is believed to be a descendant of Jacob DeHaven, who made the loan to Washington.

According to authorities, a record of the loan is on file in Washington, and could be collected by DeHaven if it could be proved that it was his ancestor that furnished the money.

Eastern Shore of Maryland historians have reviewed the debated question of whether Henry Clay spent part of his boyhood in an old mansion house near McDaniel, known as Clay's Neck. Contractors last week began tearing down the house's walls, built of bricks dating back into the seventeenth century.

Although histories fail to verify the claim, Chief Judge Frank Lowe, of Talbot County's Orphan Court, and Associate Judge Thomas L. Slaughter, of the same court, assert that their grandfathers handed down the story that the early American orator for a while lived in Talbot County as a boy.

A Negro, Charles Caldwell, who owns the property now, sold the traditional house to a contractor who desired the structure for its bricks.

State Senator Seized On Speeding Charge

Waynesboro, Pa., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—State Senator William D. Mansfield, of McKeesport, was arrested in St. Thomas township over the week-end for speeding. His speed was checked at 75 miles per hour.

Boston's Mayor Bans Sean O'Casey's Play

Boston, Jan. 15 (U.P.).—Sean O'Casey's play, "Within the Gates," now showing in Philadelphia after a long and successful run in New York, was banned in Boston by Mayor Frederick W. Mansfield late today.

Numerous complaints by Catholics, Methodists and Universalists that the O'Casey drama was definitely antireligious led to the mayor's decision. He asked the Shubert Theater management to cancel the one-week engagement scheduled to open next Monday.

Night Resorts Are All Giving New Programs

Violet Bache's Fan Dance Is Novel Feature at the Shoreham.

By Kay Ware.

Changes in floor shows predominate in night club news today. Shoreham's best hit is Seab Waring, a pal of Rudy Vallee's at Yale. They started out in dramatic performances together, later toured, Rudy with his sax and Seab with funny noises. Now he's "presented by Rudy Vallee" and imitates a model T flivver, a vacuum cleaner and an airplane.

Violet Bache puts on a dance with a transparent fan and a long feather train. She's studied in Germany and gave several European performances before royalty. She does the rhumba.

Diane and Del Campo, dance team, offer La Cucuracha, tango and Continental. They are just back from Hollywood, were featured at the Coconut Grove. They doubled for George Raft and Carol Lombard in "Bolero."

* * * *

Tiny closes his contest Saturday. He offers two champagne cocktails for the best parody on "You're the Top." Drop out to the Shoreham lounge and hear the ones he has so far.

Heigh-Ho's Baron and Brady continue for their third dancing week and present an intricate version of "Manhattan Serenade."

Also, Heigh-Ho will soon have a hymn book, that is, tunes that are always requested. Since the orchestrations were somewhat the worse for wear they had to be put behind bound covers. They call it "Social Hymns."

Who was the gentleman who passed out crisp bills when the pianist played "Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf?" Ramon responded with cafe royal, flaming brandy in a chafing dish.

Still secretive about the future high lights up there. After Baron and Brady another fine dance team is promised; then the surprise and mystery act. Another whisper: That Paul Whiteman and boys, plus Ramona, may be over from Baltimore some night.

Wheeler at Mayflower.

Mayflower news consists chiefly of famous names, like Bert Wheeler and Bob Woolsey, then Irene Rich last Monday night, playing hostess to a party after the premiere of "On to Fortune." Ilka Chase was there, and Steuart Chaney, director of the play. Mary Rogers is guest of the hotel; her father is expected later in the week. Wallace Beery may bob up any minute. Another patron—Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theater Owners Association.

John Slaughter, of the Willard's Bamboo Room, has been selected to furnish music for the Bal Boheme. Eddie Pierce has taken Fenton Froom's place with Ernestine Gardner in the Bamboo Room during the latter's illness. Odd thing that Eddie has played saxophone for years and no one ever thought of asking him to sing.

Hi-Hat patrons will be glad to hear that Gordon St. Chad and his Royal Hawaiian Serenaders are back, succeeding Manuel Bofill and boys. The Hawaiians opened Hi-Hat and stayed on till early summer, became dear to the hearts of Washington song lovers with their huge repertoire and informal table-to-table manner.

The big hit at Club Troika is the singing trio's version of a skit, the "Organ Grinder's Family," portraying three European street performers. Ladino Diloff is particularly good with "The Flea," that song that Feodor Chaliapin makes so amusing. Matt Windsor plays more and more piano, by popular request. Most popular solo: "Poet and Peasant Overture."

Speaking of piano, Troika boasts of Matt himself, Mnoga Pivovino, Dimitri Matnyatnikoff and Art Kingsley, who all play well enough for solo work, while all the rest of the orchestra, the bus boy, the head waiter, and two of the waitresses all know black from white on the keyboard.

Social list: Andrew Wiley, just back from the Soviet Republic; debutante Barbara Davis in a party of young buds and swains; Representative Sirovich with a party of eight.

Brooks at La Paree.

La Paree presents Bobby Brooks, who introduces a new show. The Casimiera Girls do a soft shoe number, a carioca; the Dumonts, a dance team, do musical comedy styles and tap steps. Another team, Casimiera and Carmine, offer a modernistic.

Lotus brings Broadway to town. Elise and Don, lately of London, have a new version of the rhumba; Mary Chrysler goes triple rhythm in a soft shoe; Marie Wells sings. Bill Strickland, Judy Ellington and Dick Koons fill the bill.

Maryland Club's Club l'Hiver offers Syn Wynn, torch singer; Susan Hall and Walter Doe, two Washington youngsters, who seem to appear in somebody's night club on an average of once a month; Charles Mayer, with new songs; Fran Trapp, with accordion solos, and, best of all, Bill Scully and his New York band. These lads are noted for their special arrangements and novelty bits.

Club Carlton's cocktail lounge broke into art and copy in December's Fortune. Rather nice bits about it, too, to the general effect that the lounge is as smart as one could hope. Best of all, right-hand column of the wine list is more than considerate.

Club Habana, with its trick lighting effects, waving palms and variable sky, is comforting this cold and wintry weather. Tarrant and Dacita, dance team, and Billy McIntyre are good entertainment. Incidentally, Billy worked harder than usual a few nights ago. Senior McIntyre came up, cast a critical eye on son's act, admitted that Billy was pretty good.

Seen at Habana: Senator Huey Long sipping a lemonade; Nu Omega Chi girls at a dinner dance; Guy Lombardo and his wife, and Roman Sollazo, Puerto Rican attorney.

Madrillon continues to be Spanish in floor show. Anita and Manuel show you the paso double in quick time, the waltz Madrid, the Latin-American bolero. Others on the job are Emilia Gilmore, toe and novelty dancer; Leon Brusiloff and boys, including Jack Schaeffer, who doubles in trumpet and song, and Pianist Ross DelRoy, who sings and dances.

Taxi and Coal Truck Upset; 4 Are Unhurt

Four persons escaped injury yesterday afternoon in a traffic crash at Fifteenth street and Constitution avenue, in which a taxicab and a truck were overturned and a ton of coal strewn across the intersection.

Medical treatment was refused, said park police, by Donald T. Davis, cab driver, 452 M street southwest; his passenger, Leo Fesenmeier, of Baltimore, and Emanuel Holes and Roosevelt Banks, colored, of Alexandria, who were aboard the fuel truck.

$67,000 Granted for Research At the University of Virginia

Rockefeller Foundation Provides Two Grants, One of $35,000 for Investigation in Chemistry Fields; $35,000 for Social Sciences.

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—Recent grants from national educational foundations totaling $67,000 for research work at the University of Virginia and other gifts were acknowledged at this month's meeting of the board of visitors, governing body of the university, it was announced today by President John Lloyd Newcomb.

The Rockefeller Foundation provided two grants, one of $35,000 for scientific investigations in the fields of chemistry, physics and biology, and the other a $30,000 fund for projects in the social sciences, including economics, commerce, history, psychology, political science, sociology and rural social economics. Both funds are to be expended over a five-year period.

A grant of $1,500 has been made by the International Cancer Research Foundation to aid studies of cancer by Dr. Albert J. Casey, professor of pathology in the medical school.

The Josiah Macy Junior Foundation has made an appropriation of $500 to Dr. Alfred Chanutin, also of the medical faculty, for a study of cholesterol in the field of biochemistry.

Dr. Jesse W. Beams, professor of physics, received a $100 gift from the National Research Council for the purchase of material and equipment to be used in special research projects in which he has already achieved results of far-reaching consequence.

Other gifts include 12 etchings of Yale University from the Yale University Press, a valuable collection for the forestry library from Alfred Acker, professor of forestry at the university, and more than 1,000 mounted photographs of famous Americans and foreign subjects in art, architecture and landscape from John Dutton Wright, of New York City.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

BEHIND THE SCENES: Saturday night, Judge Hymie Bushel, who is Rudy Vallee's lawyer, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Reilly sat with me at El Morocco, one of the more popular night clubs . . . Reilly is chief of Hauptmann's defense counsel.

"I'm going out to the trial Monday," said Mrs. Reilly . . . "No, you're not," said her husband, "a man can't get dramatic in front of his wife." Mrs. Reilly, who is French and wise, said: "You mean a husband can't show off in front of his wife" . . . Reilly beamed: "My dear, you hit the nail right on the head."

BROADWAY CURIO: Eddy Duchin, Bostonian, who studied to become a pharmacist and ended up as one of the highest-priced of modern band leaders . . . Is a grand pianist, and when he is at a piano keyboard, he is absolutely sure of himself.

The other night, he was nervous, upset . . . The reason? Sitting at a ringside table in Central Park Casino was the famous concert pianist, Rachmaninoff, his eyes boring into Duchin.

PARTY: They gave Sammy White a party at the Hollywood Sunday night, and all of Broadway turned out to pay him homage, including Eddie Dowling and the entire cast of successful "Thumbs Up."

Sammy White is a hoofer, in the card index of casting offices, but he is something more than that . . . He is a game fellow, with plenty of "moxie," Broadwayee for courage . . . You remember him from Ziegfeld's memorable "Show Boat" . . . The dancing team in that show was Puck and White . . . Eva Puck was his wife . . . They split up their dancing partnership and their marriage, because he liked to gamble on race horses . . . White, alone, essayed a comeback . . . He clicked as a "single," lost all interest in the comparative speeds of race horses . . . Broadway gave him a party that actually was a slap on the back . . . And I trust that Eva Puck, wherever she is, heard it.

George V. McLaughlin, Triboro Bridge commissioner, former police commissioner of New York and former banking superintendent . . . Comments on the recent column which traced Nathan Burkan's reduction of strenuous physical exercise.

Commissioner McLaughlin, 6 feet 3 inches tall, and with the general frame of a heavyweight champion, at 47 is inclined to agree that middle-age is unfitted for rigorous exercise . . . "Worst thing a middle-aged man can do," he says, "is to go to a gymnasium after a drinking bout. The double strain of liquor on the heart and exercise is sheer foolishness."

Left-handed: Paul Wittenstein is a real celebrity, or so it seems to me . . . He is a distinguished concert pianist, one-armed . . . He is such a brilliant musician that Ravel, Richard Strauss and other famous composers have written only for him, composing works that can be played in their entirety by the left-handed genius . . . He served in the Austrian army . . . In the fighting with the Russians, his right arm was amputated . . . His concerts largely are attended by Russians, whose countrymen shot off his arm.

ON Friday night part of an audience at the Paramount Theater hissed Col. Charles Lindbergh when his picture was flashed on the screen . . . The same persons, who hissed the bravest American of this generation, applauded the screen likeness of Bruno Hauptmann.

This amazing instance of mob opinion reminds you of Beaumarchais' satirical "Barber of Seville," written in 1783 . . . One of the characters in the famous satirical comedy has this to say of mob opinion built on malicious slander or calumny.

"Calumny! You don't really know what you are disdaining when you disdain it. I have seen persons of the utmost virtue laid low by it, or nearly so. Believe me, there is no false report, however, crude, no abomination, no absurd falsehood which the idlers in a great city, can not if they take the trouble, make universally believed—and here we have tittle-tattlers who are past masters in their art. First of all, they circulate a faint rumor, which skims the surface of the ground like a swallow just before a storm pianissimo and murmurous, so that it seems to pass without leaving a trace; but really, in its passage it has implanted its poisonous germs.

"Some ear has heard it, some mouth repeats it, and it reaches other ears. The mischief has been done. It sprouts like a mushroom, spreads like a swelling wave as it moves from one to another, until it becomes the very devil; so that all of a sudden, who can tell how, the slander has taken shape, is enlarging, is growing steadily under all men's eyes. It extends the range of its flight, its great wings making the roar of a whirlwind, which amid rolling thunder, sweeps everything into its resistless eddy, until it becomes a general clamor, a public crescendo, a universal chorus of hatred and contempt."

That was written in 1783 . . . in 1935, Lindbergh is hissed in a Broadway theater . . . He was hissed, I guess, because his baby son was kidnaped and murdered.

Conference Opened On Parent Education

A conference on parent education was held yesterday at the National Education Association Building. Miss Alice Sowers, parent education specialist of the National Parent-Teacher Congress, conducted the conference, which was held under the auspices of the District Congress of Parents and Teachers.

Mrs. L. B. Castell, president of the District Congress, and Mrs. Benjamin Wood, chairman of study groups, were in charge of arrangements. Among those attending were Mrs. C. C. Coppage, of Baltimore, president of the Maryland Congress, with seven other Maryland members.

D. C. Woman Honored.

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 15 (AP).—Dr H. W. A. Hanson, president of Gettysburg (Pa.) College, today was elected president of the National Lutheran Educaitonal Conference as the group completed its annual meeting here. Dr. Mary E. Markley, of Washington, D. C., editor of conference publications, was elected treasurer.

Admiral Standley in Hospital.

Rear Admiral William H. Standley, U. S. N., chief of naval operations and a delegate to the recent naval conversations in London, is recuperating from what Naval Hospital attaches term a "minor" operation. He will be back at work in the Navy Department in two weeks, physicians assert.

'Square Deal' Recruits Foes Of Huey Long

His Opposition Spreads as Ponder Accepts U. S. Court Ruling.

New Orleans, Jan. 15 (AP).—Opposition to Huey Long's dictatorship was organizing through Louisiana tonight as the "deadline" for the Square Dealers' ultimatum, demanding repeal of dictatorial laws, drew near.

Already more than a half-dozen "companies," formed at scattered points over the State, are pledged to support the Square Deal Association in its fight against the dictatorship.

Meanwhile, announcement was made in New Orleans that Judge A. L. Ponder, jr., had formally accepted the order of Federal Judge Wayne G. Borah dissolving a Long-instituted suit to tie up New Orleans' finances.

Judge Ponder's announcement was made in a brief decision taking official cognizance of the Federal Court order restraining Gov. O. K. Allen and Attorney General Gaston L. Porterie, Long Lieutenants, from proceeding with the concursus action which would have placed the city's funds in the hands of the civil court until the legality of all its debts had been determined.

The city administration, under the direction of Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley, Long's political enemy, headed off the Allen-Porterie move by placing all of the city's financial affairs in Federal Court under a 1934 Congressional Act permitting municipalities to readjust their debts under Federal supervision.

Mayor Walmsley said city employes would be paid half of their current salary. It had been feared that no salaries could be paid at this time.

Girl Slain, Sister And Father Shot

'Self-Inflicted' Wounds May Kill Parent.

Washington, Pa., Jan. 15 (AP).—A young woman was shot to death and her sister seriously wounded in a burst of gunfire at their home late today. Police are guarding the father, Anthony Zuckett, 65, who is expected to die from wounds Patrolman Mel Humphries says were "self inflicted." The dead girl is Sue Zuckett, 22.

Neighbors, led by Humphries, rushed into the house in response to screams for help, after Sue had fallen from the second-story window of the house fatally wounded.

They found the other sister, Ida Zuckett, 16, with six bullet wounds in her head and body. Humphries said the father was locked in a bed room but responded to a command to come out.

Veteran Fire Fighter Will Be Buried Today

Andrew Jackson (Yank) Sullivan, 81, retired veteran deputy fire chief, who died Monday at his home at 3239 P street northwest, will be buried in Mount Olivet Cemetery today. Funeral services will be held at his home at 8:45 a. m., followed by requiem mass at Holy Trinity Church.

Fire Chief Charles E. Schrom and some 50 members of the Fire Department are to attend the rites. "Yank" Sullivan, who was retired from the department in 1927, was one of the city's most renowned fire fighters. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Margaret Cosgrove Sullivan.

Lawyer Freed As Outlaw Aid Faces New Trial

Dillinger Counsel Charged With Harboring Van Meter.

Chicago, Jan. 15 (AP).—The Government rallied its forces today for a new drive against Dillinger associates—a campaign which already has sent 35 persons to prisons and graveyards.

United States District Attorney Dwight H. Green, after Louis Piquett's acquittal last night on charges of harboring John Dillinger, announced the lawyer would be brought to trial soon for concealing Homer Van Meter, Dillinger aid.

Two special assistant Attorneys General requested Federal Judge Holly to set trial dates for William and Ella Finerty and Marie Conforti, also accused of hiding Van Meter from the law. The jurist said he would fix the dates tomorrow. The defendants are in jail.

"Piquett is now going to have to answer for the Van Meter case," Green said. "We're not through prosecuting anyone who helped criminals like Dillinger. We will start the second trial soon as possible."

Piquett, free on bond and jubilant over his acquittal, replied, "I'll fight it. I'll conduct the same defense that won for me in the first trial. I know I'll be freed."

The Government was just as certain of his conviction. They said the decisive point in the trial involved the fact that he served as Dillinger's attorney and that Judge Holly had ruled a lawyer was not compelled to surrender his client. Prosecutors said he would be stripped of that defense in the second hearing. He was accused of providing a sanctuary for Van Meter at the home of James Probasco and arranging with Drs. Wilhelm Loeser and Harold Cassidy for the outlaws' plastic surgery.

Piquett's assistant, Arthur O'Leary, and the two surgeons pleaded guilty in the Dillinger case and testified against him. They will be used as witnesses in the second trial.

Mrs. Dall Heads Child Research

Daughter of President to Succeed Dr. Lubin on Center's Staff.

Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Dall yesterday was elected chairman of the executive board of the National Child Research Center, which operates a nursery school and conducts research into various fields of child education and child health here. "Buzzie" Dall, Mrs. Dall's youngest child, attends the school.

In accepting the chairmanship, Mrs. Dall said:

"I have been interested in nursery schools for several years, and I have been in close touch with the work of the National Child Research Center for the last year and a half. It has made many valuable contributions in the field of preschool education. It enjoys the unusual advantage of consultation with national specialists in the educational fields of child health, child psychology, mental hygiene and related subjects. With the increasing general interest in nursery schools, I believe that its scope of service can be correspondingly enlarged."

The National Child Research Center was founded in 1928 with the aid of a grant from the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Foundation, and is a nonprofit-making institution. The chairman of the executive board receives no salary. In this post Mrs. Dall succeeds Dr. Isadore Lubin, Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

Envoy's Wife Gives Party At Legation

Debutante Daughter Aids Mme. Prochnik at Gay Affair.

Gathering Is Featured by Parade of the Latest in Fashions.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Yesterday was another busy day for members of Capital society, for with the official season in progress there are luncheons, teas, and dinners enough to satisfy even the most insatiable lover of pleasure.

Yesterday afternoon Mme. Prochnik, wife of the Minister of Austria, entertained at the last of the series of receptions which she has been giving during the winter. As usual, there was a large and delightful gathering in the legation. The hostess was assisted in receiving by her debutante daughter, Miss Valerie Prochnik.

The hostess wore a gown of black velvet fashioned with a brief train and trimmed with a deep, square collar and cuffs of rich, creamy lace. Miss Prochnik wore an afternoon gown of midnight blue velvet, fashioned with long, fitted sleeves.

Distinguished Gathering.

Glimpsed in the dining room, where most of the guests gathered around the tea table and punch bowl were the Solicitor General and Mrs. J. Crawford Biggs, Senator David I. Walsh, Senator Arthur Capper, Mrs. J. Hamilton Lewis, wife of Senator Lewis; Mrs. H. C. Chalkley, wife of the Commercial Counselor of the British Embassy; the Attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. H. H. Simms, the latter wearing a black afternoon frock with a tunic of dull gold lame, and a small black hat. With the Simms were Mr. Oliver Gardner, of New York, and Mrs. F. W. Bunker who wore a smart black woolen suit trimmed with Persian lamb and an off-the-face hat of black velvet.

Mrs. John Franklin Carter was among those assisting Mme. Prochnik. She wore a frock of dark blue chiffon fashioned with long sleeves and a close, round neckline trimmed with tiny rosettes of the same material as the gown.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Britten were there, the latter wearing a black frock and hat, with a handsome mink wrap. They were chatting with Mrs. James Ellwood Jones and her sister, Mrs. Marguerite Bornstraeger. Miss Bornstraeger who, by the way, is quite the loveliest young person in town this winter, wore a rich mink wrap, and a small brown tricorne trimmed with tiny knots of pale blue ribbon atop her ash blonde hair. Miss Borntraeger and her mother have been spending the winter with Mrs. Jones in her home on Belmont road, and the former will leave tomorrow for Pittsburgh, where she will attend the brilliant hunt ball to be given by Mr. Richard Mellon on Saturday evening.

The ball is for the Rolling Rock Hunt, of which Miss Borntraeger is a member, and will be given in Mr. Mellon's handsome town house.

Ratibs Entertain.

Yesterday the Minister of Egypt and Mme. Ratib entertained at a luncheon in the legation on Sheridan Circle, when the Ambassador of France and Mme. de Laboulaye were the ranking guests. It was a delightful party, the guests being received in the large drawing room of the legation, where Mme. Ratib has made several changes during the short time she has been in Washington.

The luncheon table was covered with a cloth of rare lace over a deep red satin cover, and a huge bowl of red roses and two epergnes of fruit were the only decorations.

Mme. Ratib wore a smart frock of black taffeta with elbow length sleeves, and trimmed with a large bow of self-material at the neckline. Her daughter, Mlle. Nihal Menemenli, was in emerald green crepe trimmed with rows of tiny pleats.

Among the other guests were the Ambassador of Poland, Mr. Stainislaw Patek, always a delightfully gay guest; the Minister of Austria and Mme. Prochnik, Baroness Beck-Friis and Mr. and Mrs. Albert B. Dewey. The latter is always worthy of comment, for she is among the most smartly gowned young matrons in the Capital. Yesterday she wore a simple black crepe frock, and a small hat of velvet, high crowned and pointed.

There is always some one bemoaning the passing of the good old days. # Beauty Salon In Downtown Area Opened

Treatments Administered to Delegation From State in Congress.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

IT'S HURRAH again, and this time for the new beauty salon which has just opened its wide and friendly doors in a downtown hotel. Hundreds of women who call New York their other home are familiar with a certain salon there which is presided over by a cosmetician known all over this country and Europe too for his successful beauty work.

Pilgrims who formerly journeyed to his salon in the Big City may now turn their faces to his beauty mecca conveniently located in our own downtown shopping district. They can forsake the grind of a morning's shopping and seek rest, relaxation, and renovation in one of the most charming beauty spots this side of Paris.

Walls and ceilings, are a luscious tawny peach with deep undershades of orange and blue. The floors and luxurious furniture are brown and silver. The chairs in which you are seated while having a facial or shampoo really amount to couches, they are so long, wide, deep, soft and cushiony.

The preparations used in the treatments are those of a European woman who for the past decade has administered to the aristocracy of foreign courts, and the flower of continental society in her Academie de Beaute in Paris. They are sold in one Washington store, and used only in this salon.

After you have put yourself in the hands of the expertly trained operators, and after you've once tried the delightful creams and lotions, you'll wonder how you ever got along without them.

Any day you feel depressed just take yourself down to this "place of beauty," have a thorough renovation and you'll feel perked up by at least 10 degrees.

Dressy Nighties.

By time you're all dressed up in the very dressy nighties displayed in a certain shop you feel like a cross between a movie star and a Dresden doll. Printed batiste shirred at the waist, puffed sleeves, ruffles around the hem, all these combine to turn mere nighties into frivolous, feminine and flattering affairs which look costly, but in reality sell for $1.

The gowns are available in white, maize, blue, and pink.

Snappy Sweater Suits.

The thrift shop, appropriate name for a certain dress department of a downtown store, is luring shoppers from far and near with a new supply of snappy, sporty sweater suits priced at $7.95. They consist of a plain skirt and tailored jacket with a by-swing back and patch pockets.

They come in red, blue, brown, and green in a wide variety of sizes.

Shirley Temple Dresses.

There was a time when little girls were much neglected by the styles. Designers did all they could to glorify a woman's wardrobe, but nothing at all for the children. But how times have changed! Children now, and particularly young girls, are being catered to from all sides. There are play dresses, school dresses, and even little party frocks all looking like Paris creations.

A local store features Shirley Temple dresses which are authentic copies of the frocks worn by the little star in her latest picture. They range in sizes from three to eight and priced from $1.95 to $5.95.

Key Books Displayed.

Women take strongly to the little auto key books shown now in an F street store. They're just so big, just large enough, in fact, for three keys. They're so minute they fit easily into a crowded purse without weighting it down.

Or you can tuck it away in your husband's vest pocket. However you use it, you'll find it's a little something that's a big convenience.

Angorette Blousettes.

The colder the weather, the more you will appreciate the angorette blousettes sold in a certain shop for only $1. These are attractive little combination blouse-sweaters that are made like blouses but out of sweater material.

They look nice with a plain skirt, and are quite smart—and very warm—with a coat suit. They're available now in brown, green, orange and blue.

Perfume in Crystal Bottles.

Often there's a word for perfumes, sweet or alluring, exotic, bewildering, exciting or spicy. But here's an instance when the dictionary fails. A downtown store has received a perfume in extraordinary crystal bottles that is all these words together and yet not wholly one.

Fraternity Plaques.

If you want a fraternity placque to hang in your study, just drop into the notions department of a downtown store. Here they have numbers of them already, but if yours isn't there they will be glad to order for you.

Both the fraternity coat of arms and the name is done in colors against a natural wood background. The cost is negligible.

Formal Creation Is Made Informal By Chic Tunic

Pattern No. 860.

FORMAL or informal? It doesn't matter, for this gown can go to the party either way. The dinner version "covers up" with a picturesque little tunic, high-necked and long-sleeved. The other version is glamorously formal with halter neckline and suspender straps. The contrast between the ingenious chic of the dinner tunic and the sophistication of the formal gown gives you a feeling of owning two distinctly different costumes.

This is just one of the many double-duty fashions featured in the Advance Spring Pattern Book. This particular model comes in sizes 12 to 38. Size 18 (36) requires 3⅝ yards of 39-inch material for the dress, 2 yards for the tunic and 1½ yards for the girdle.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I read with much interest the letter from "Betty," which you printed Sunday. I want to give her a little sound advice from one who knows. I, too, am married to a department store buyer, and have been the past 20 years.

• • • •

I was always left at home on his buying trips to New York while he enjoyed good shows, played cards, shot crap, like the average buyer does—and who knows what else! I thought he left me home to save money, but found out too late he was spending it on himself.

• • • •

Get yourself a job, Betty, and do not do as I did—wait until you have faded and haven't the strength to go out into the business world. Oh, yes. My husband, too, stays home every night with me; never wants to go any place and thinks he is doing a wonderful thing by sitting at home. But that is because they are around men and women all day in the store and, as a rule, having a grand time talking and joking, looking forward to their next buying trip.

Wake up, Betty, before it is too late. Make your stand now.

BUYER'S WIFE.

Shape Your Own Life.

DEAR BUYER'S WIFE: I question if an older woman is contributing much of value to a younger woman's happiness when she flavors counsel with such a decided tone of bitterness and pessimism as your letter contains.

• • • •

Whatever your husband's weaknesses of prodigality and selfishness, at least he has provided you with financial security, I gather. You do have a home. He does spend his evenings there, when he isn't away on these moot buying trips to New York Ctiy.

• • • •

Many of those business women you see in your mind's eye as having a grand frolic, "talking and joking" with their male associates, would give a great deal to be able to exchange places with the woman at home—who has the opportunity, if she elects to embrace it, of leading a peaceful, orderly, sheltered, contented existence.

• • • •

Happiness, serenity, contentment, are qualities of being which have their roots in the mentality and in the spirit of the possessor. Bitterness, resentment, disappointment, a sense of futility, grow in the same soil. It depends on which seed is sown and tended. The circumstances of one's life are relatively unimportant. It's one's reaction to them that matters.

• • • •

Too many women make the mistake of lazily looking to their husbands to invest their lives with all meaning, drama, significance and direction. Each individual can and should, within certain limits, reach out into the cosmos and create those qualities for himself. The woman who does this may become so vital a personality that she compels her husband's interest, as well as the interest of sufficient other persons to keep her hours so fully occupied she has no time for fretful dissatisfaction with her lot; for bitter envy of her husband's fancied freedom; or pessimistic suspicions regarding his loyalty and sense of fair play.

• • • •

A woman who has been married 20 years should have outgrown shallow cynicism. She should have intimately experienced that expansion of character told by Oliver Wendell Holmes in the concluding stanza of "The Chambered Nautilus:"

"Build thee more stately mansions,
O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea"

What Today Means

"Capricorn."

IF JANUARY 16 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10 a. m. until 12 noon, from 2 to 4 p. m. and from 7 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 8 to 10 a. m., from 4 to 6 p. m. and from 9 to 11 p. m.

On this January 16 conflicting opinions are very likely to create contradictory statements regarding a matter of importance. If you use good judgment you will be very careful about taking an active part in any controversial discussion. It will be much better to amicably settle financial disputes on this date than to permit legal entanglements to possibly cause future worries. You can make this an auspicious day, if your sense of justice is allowed to direct your actions. In any matter involving a principle of right and wrong, if you do the proper thing, there is little doubt but you will have no cause for regret.

There is a possibility of your receiving an invitation of a social nature that it might prove advantageous to accept. Married and engaged couples, as well as those taking the important step, will avoid trouble if they refrain from making any unkind remarks in regard to any relative.

If a woman and January 16 is your birthday, you may be a little too diffident for your own good. Cultivate the habit of being more self-assertive, as well as indifferent to the opinions of others. Your loyalty to family and friends is an admirable trait, but be careful it is not imposed upon. You may probably become quite affluent, and will probably accomplish a great deal of good, which will earn you merited reward. In domestic matters you should be most successful, and through home life gain much happiness. Office detail work, teaching, dressmaking, or acting as a sales woman are possibly the best lines of activity through which you can earn a living.

If a man and January 16 is your natal day, if you will only take the initiative step in matters of importance and not defer too much to policies suggested by others, your progress may prove a pleasant surprise. You should be very successful in financial matters. Banking, stock brokerage, insurance and real estate, as well as the writing of verse, are some of the things you should do very well.

Wife of New House Member Thrilled By Her First Experience in Gallery

Mrs. Josh Lee, Long a Student of Drama, Regards Sessions as Series of Absorbing Scenes.

By Mary Greener Kelly.

CONGRESS is either the most dramatic or the dullest place on earth. It all depends upon the point of view. Many onlookers, including even members' wives, turn away after their first look into the House of Representatives, disillusioned by the noise and confusion. Others find they are bored with procedure which is meaningless to them.

Not so Mrs. Josh Lee, wife of the new Democratic Representative from Norman, Okla. Young, blonde and pretty, Mrs. Lee is finding her first experience in the spectators' gallery not only interesting, but colorful, even thrilling. Perhaps the fact she is an experienced Thespian has something to do with it.

"There is so much there one doesn't see on the surface," she explained. "Each session fairly teems with human appeal. To the spectator, it is like witnessing a series of scenes, distinct but related, in which the serious and the humorous are delightfully interwoven. Why, I can fancy playing a part in some of the episodes myself, so absorbingly do they become.

A student of drama and music from her early years, Mrs. Lee pursued her education along those lines in two junior colleges, Bush Conservatory in Chicago, and the University of Oklahoma. The mother of two children, one 10 and the other 3, she is still sensitive to situations which might be translated into dramatic literature.

Inspiration for Playwright.

"A playwright could find plenty of inspiration on Capitol Hill," she mused. "An actor could study characterization to his heart's content."

Unlike any artistically inclined persons, Mrs. Lee has found perfect congeniality of taste in her married life. Representative Lee, a former professor of public speaking and debate at the University of Oklahoma, has groomed many of the legislators who preceded him to Congress. Some years, as many as one-third of the membership of the State Legislature were his students. In addition, he shares Mrs. Lee's devotion to the spoken drama. He has acted and directed plays himself.

The Lees first met on the University of Oklahoma campus. It was June, 1922. He was then one of the younger professors (being only 30), and she was a student and leading lady in campus productions. In six months they were married.

That summer he filled one of his many engagements as lecturer on a Chautauqua circuit. There came a demand for a humorous drama on the same bill. Mr. Lee, in short order, whipped into shape the famous old farce, "A Pair of Sixes," with Mrs. Lee and himself enacting the leading roles. The production packed them in and kept them laughing.

"There were no printed programs issued by the Chautauqua," reminisced Mrs. Lee, "so we were never identified as husband and wife. That fact meant more to the box office in those days than it does now. Married people then were thought to be devoid of romantic appeal on the stage."

Voice Training Seen Necessary.

Voice training, Mrs. Lee believes, is not only important but necessary to success in public office. Most people, she says, would rather listen than read about what a candidate has to offer.

"However, many a profound idea is either misinterpreted or lost entirely through poor expression," she continued. "Sometimes it is 'the next best plan,' which is adopted, because it has been more effectively presented by its author. Any man or woman aspiring to public office should devote hours to the mechanics of translating ideas into words.

"Of course, mere word play and oratory will not make a Representative. He has to produce the goods in the way of constructive legislation or his constituents will never tolerate him."

By way of illustration, Mrs. Lee reviewed the interesting correlation between her own husband's legislative and speech training. A teacher of political debate, the former professor studied political science, economics and law at night of his own accord.

Made Study of Bills.

As he trained potential Congress members in the art of speaking, he became intensely interested in legislation itself. He studied bills and proposed enactments until he developed a keen perception, and evolved constructive and original ideas along legislative lines.

"He finally became so absorbed in the study of government," Mrs. Lee said, "that he went to Columbia University and took up political science and economics as a specialty. He received a master's degree, then went directly to Cumberland University and obtained his law degree. Then he returned to the University of Oklahoma and took up his work in public speaking where he left off."

By this time Mr. Lee began to be regarded not only as a speech expert but an authority on the science of government. His name was mentioned as congressional timber by many of his former students and friends. That started the ball rolling. On the stump, Josh Lee had no rivals in his own State.

Devoted to her home life now, Mrs. Lee finds she can utilize much of her dramatic training in rearing her children. Story telling is an art, she says, that is not wasted on the smallest child.

Can Detect Insincerity.

"It is a strange fact," she observed yesterday, "that even the very young can feel and detect insincerity and superficiality both in the voice of a story teller and in the words of an author. Some stories never ring true with children. They will discard them, in spite of their beautiful illustrations and colorful story-book covers. Other stories catch on immediately, and the young listener will demand their recital over and over."

Dramatic training, Mrs. Lee believes, opens up a world of interests for any student, old or young. It makes him alert and conscious of life and situations and keen to take a part in them.

"It also gives one a different slant on the study of literature," she said. "The beauty of so much of our best writing depends upon cadence and rhythm. We love to read aloud in our family, it opens up so many new meanings to us that we miss in silent reading. People, generally, I believe, would be happier as well as more selfconfident if they were frequently allowed the opportunity to express themselves vocally."

All Impressed By Complexion Of Queen Mary

QUEEN MARY of England may wear queer shaped hats but she has a complexion that is the envy of every woman who sees her.

So reports Miss Jessie McQueen, home service counselor for the American Gas Association, who gave a close-up view of the queen in a talk yesterday at the Dodge Hotel. Miss McQueen was guest of honor at a luncheon given by Miss Ruth Sheldon, of the Washington Gas Light Co., to introduce her to home economics workers here.

Last summer Miss McQueen attended the Scottish Highland game, which English royalty always witnesses.

On seeing Queen Mary Miss McQueen was impressed both by her stately bearing and her complexion.

"The queen's complexion is lovely, soft and pink," said Miss McQueen. "It's the kind that every English poet claims for every English girl. On this occasion the queen wore a blue gown trimmed in squirrel. She alighted from the royal carriage and moved with stately demeanor across the field, followed by the Duke and Duchess of York and the two little princesses, Elizabeth and Margaret Rose.

"Queen Mary is more than a queen, she is a real human being. Her dignity was gently laid aside as she swayed to and fro to the stirring music of the numerous bagpipes."

Mrs. Mary Linsley, of the Dodge Hotel, related her impressions of the old inns of England.

Pedestrian Radio Sets Are Now on Market

If you pass a man on the street and hear operatic arias or speeches coming out of his pockets, don't jump to the conclusion he's a ventriloquist. More than likely he has one of the new pedestrian radio sets.

Each set, Popular Mechanics reports, weighs about three and a half pounds. The batteries to generate power are strung along the belt, while the loud speaker is concealed in a breast pocket and is fed by wires leading from the receiving set attached to the belt.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Tuberculosis of the Intestine.

TUBERCULOSIS has been rather accurately described as the most curable, under proper conditions, of all of our chronic diseases. If the diagnosis can be made early and if the patient can be placed at absolute rest we can with reasonable certainty say that he will recover. But in too few of our cases do we insist upon absolute rest, and the disease between the ages of 20 and 40 continues to be the cause of approximately one death out of every five. As has been pointed out in earlier articles, tuberculosis may affect not only the lungs but other parts of the body, and it has long been recognized that tuberculous ulcers may form in the intestine as a complication of lung tuberculosis.

Only in recent years has the problem of intestinal tuberculosis been attacked with success. Formerly the condition was looked upon as hopeless, but now, with methods of reasonably early diagnosis, intestinal tuberculosis, while offering a serious problem, does not present an impossible one.

Every patient with pulmonary tuberculosis who has persistent symptoms of intestinal disturbance should, during the progress of his treatment, be the subject of a careful intestinal X-ray study. Symptoms of colon involvement are largely pain and bloating. Diarrhea is present in rather more than one-third of the cases. Tenderness over the abdomen is not alone indicative of the disease. About one-third of these patients show no symptoms whatever, yet on examination fairly extensive ulceration is found. In most instances, in adults, the disease comes from the swallowing of tubercle bacilli coughed up from the lungs. When they reach the intestine they first attack the lymph tissue close to the beginning of the large bowel.

Once the diagnosis has been determined it is extremely important that the patient be placed completly at rest. Sunlight treatment or treatment with the ultraviolet light is most gratifying and may be combined with bed rest. Without perfect rest the condition probably will go from bad to worse.

The diet should be free from fiber, easily digested, not gas forming, and not inclined to stimulate bowel activity. Gas forming foods are peas, beans, potatoes, cabbage and pastry. If the patient has difficulty in eating, olive oil will prove a valuable food. Orange juice is not only palatable but relished by most patients and may be used alone or combined with tomato juice. Lean meat is the basis of the best diet. Milk is rarely used, as it provides good culture medium for the bacteria growing in the already infected intestine. A diet high in vitamins, with the use of half an ounce of cod liver oil daily, is recommended. Laxatives should not be used. Bowel movement may be obtained by injecting into the rectum at night four to six ounces of olive oil or cottonseed oil.

Several years ago a physician of our acquaintance had an extensive tuberculous involvement of the colon. The disease in the lungs yielded to careful management and was healed in approximately one year's time. The intestinal ulcers, however, required two years additional, but the patient is now entirely well and normal as to weight, strength and resistance.

There is a definite nervous element associated with intestinal tuberculosis, and individuals suffering from this disease are inclined to expect results too quickly. There will be periods when the patient will go backward with an increase of symptoms. When this occurs patients become im-patients and frequently drift from physician to physician with the result that progress is delayed.

Hash Is Called Dish Needing No Apologies

When Carefully Prepared, It Meets Demands of Epicures.

By Dorothea Duncan.

MAYBE it makes your blood boil to hear foreign connoisseurs of cookery assert there is no art to American cookery. If it doesn't, you, the good American housewife, should be ashamed. The lack of confidence in our own dishes is frequently shown when company unexpectedly drops in for dinner and the hostess, with an apologetic sigh, quavers, "I am so sorry, but you will have to take pot luck today, because we are just having hash."

Why put the blame on the pot that produces the hash? The meat that goes into the hash is just as good as the original roast, and should be better when enhanced with the rich meat juices that make up the gravy.

Don't look amazed and say, "Why, there isn't any gravy!" Hash isn't a dish to be thrown carelessly together and eaten behind closed doors when the neighbors aren't at close enough range to smell the fragrance that is gently wafted from your kitchen window to theirs.

Dish to Be Proud of.

It is a dish to be proud of, and one that should demand as careful preparation as any other. You would go to a restaurant and eagerly order Hungarian goulash, the dish that has been made a national one by the Hungarians and so poorly imitated by American restaurant cooks, but the grand old American hash can't so much as grace your own table.

Every woman is proud of the more elaborate, truly American dishes; roast turkey, baked beans and brown bread, delicately spiced pumpkin pie, and corn on the cob.

If you would just stop to ponder a minute, you would realize that these dishes, the very ones that hold such a place of honor today, were merely what the housewife of early America had on hand.

The early pioneer women in America did not prepare these dishes with a slip-shod hand, but they brought them out in their best colors, so that they have lived to be endeared to the Americans today. It is true that the housewife, no doubt, sighed for a leg of mutton, but she made the most of what she had.

Food does not have to be expensive or rare to be appreciated. In fact, things have gotten to a point where a dish of common or humble origin is considered a rarity, if it is prepared to represent itself, rather than a fancy imitation of something that it isn't. Good everyday food doesn't aspire to a realm enjoyed by expensive or imported foods. It simply cries to be itself.

Cooked for Flavor.

The distinguishing feature of American cookery has been that the dishes are cooked for their own flavor. Don't feel, then, that it is necessary to hide your cabbage behind a thick screen of chopped pickle, pimiento or pineapple. Let it come out rightfully to the table as boiled cabbage more frequently.

There is opportunity enough for experimentation when your menus need a note of color for a party scheme or if there is a real need for a change from too frequently appearing dishes. As it stands now, the modern woman wants to bring the good old favorites in more often when her family consistently rebels because there are too many French pastries and not enough home-made apple pies.

Here is a recipe for hash that really is hash and aspires to no other title and asks for no excuses:

Beef Hash.

2 cups chopped roast beef or steak
2 to 4 cups chopped, boiled potatoes
1 cup beef gravy or brown stock
4 tablespoons butter or other fat.

Put the fat into a frying pan and then put in the meat and potato, salt and pepper, moisten with beef gravy or hot stock and cover. Let it steam or heat through thoroughly, stirring occasionally to mix evenly and also to keep it from sticking. When done, it should be neither watery nor dry, but just firm enough to stand well when dished. Two or three slices of onion may be fried in the fat or mixed with the meat and potatoes before placed in the frying pan.

Suggested Dinner Menu.

Tomato Juice Cocktail
Beef Hash
Buttered Peas and Carrots
Hearts of Lettuce with French Dressing
Graham Bread
Strawberry Preserves
Apple Pie
Coffee Milk (for children)

Liberty Won By Mechanic In Auto Death

William D. Flick Cleared of Manslaughter in Rockingham.

4 Women Escape With Lives in Collision at Culpeper.

Harrisonburg, Va., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—William D. Flick, 34, Melrose auto mechanic, was acquitted of manslaughter by a jury in Rockingham Circuit Court today.

The charge grew out of the death August 15 of Joseph Ziobore Gryciel, 22, a hitch-hiking coal miner from Hemphill, W. Va., on the valley pike north of here by a hit-and-run motorist. John Romanski, of Dupont, Pa., with Gryciel, was knocked down by the car, but escaped serious injury.

A hung jury resulted in the first trial of Flick, but the jury today deliberated only a half hour.

Flick contended he was in Harrisonburg at the time of the accident. Officers said a head lamp rim found at the scene corresponded with one on Flick's car, and that Flick was seen changing a headlight rim and radiator shell on his automobile the morning following the tragedy. Flick said his car was damaged when a truck backed into him.

Gryciel and Romanski were hiking from Dupont, Pa., to Welch, W. Va., where they hoped to get work in the coal mines.

Salesman Hurt in Crash.

Winchester, Va., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—Paul Hammond, 38, a salesman from Frederick, Md., is a patient in the hospital here as the result of an accident when his car crashed into an abutment of a small bridge on the Berryville pike east of this city.

Hurled from his car to the road, Hammond was found a few minutes later by R. E. Powell, trainmaster of the Baltimore division of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, who brought him to the hospital.

Hammond's right leg was broken and he received injuries to his right side and face. His condition is considered favorable.

He said he believed he dozed momentarily and that this was responsible for his car leaving the road. The machine was badly damaged.

Four Women Escape Death.

Culpeper, Va., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—Four employes of the Culpeper Silk Mill narrowly escaped death yesterday when their automobile was crushed in a collision with a northbound Southern passenger train.

The accident occurred at a grade crossing near the depot. Scene of fatalities in previous accidents.

The four, who were en route to their homes after the day's work, were Mrs. D. L. Sowers, owner of the auto; her daughter, Mrs. W. P. Johnson, who was driving; Mrs. Jesse Anthony and Miss Bessie Arnold, all of Culpeper County.

They were taken to hospital for medical treatment. None was seriously hurt.

Company Files Suit To Keep Blue Eagle

Seeking to prevent removal of its Blue Eagle, the Hazel-Atlas Glass Co., of Clarksburg, W. Va., yesterday asked the District Supreme Court to prohibit the National Recovery Board from taking away the "bird" pending solution of a labor dispute. The suit disclosed that the Eagle had been placed in jeopardy because the dismissal of a plumber was attributed to union activities.

The company, in rebuttal, said the plumber had been dismissed because it had discontinued its gas department in which the plumber was employed. Justice Jesse C. Adkins will consider the case today.

Maryland Asks Telephone Cut

Commission, in Appeal, Demands Lower Scale of Rates.

The Public Service Commission, of Maryland, through its counsel, Richard F. Cleveland, son of the former President of the United States, filed in the supreme court yesterday afternoon its appeal to force a reduction of rates of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of Baltimore, according to the Associated Press.

The commission issued its orders reducing the rates November 28, 1933. The company brought suit in the following month to have the order declared invalid and to have its enforcement stopped. A three-judge Federal District court on June 8, 1934, declared that the order was confiscatory; asserted that it would result in irreparable injury to the company, and prohibited its enforcement.

The commission in its appeal contended that the court was wrong in holding that reduced rates would constitute the confiscation of the company's property and urged the high court to review the evidence taken by the district court.

The case affects telephone subscriptions throughout the State, including the Maryland suburbs of the District. The order involved the sum of $1,200,000 in Maryland rates.

Legislature Gets Choice Of Tax Bills

Nice Promises Alternate Plans for Raising $10,000,000.

Says Each Proposal Will Finance Relief and Meet Deficit.

By Laurance Stuntz
(Staff Correspondent of The Post.)

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 15.—Bills providing alternate plans for raising the $10,000,000 which Maryland needs by February 1 will be ready for the Legislature when it convenes here tomorrow, Gov. Harry W. Nice promised today.

Gov. Nice declined to say what new taxes would be provided in the measures, but said any one of the bills would provide the amount needed for relief and to meet the deficit. He is leaving the Legislature the choice of the plans. If the Democratic Legislature is not satisfied with any of the proposals of the Republican Governor, they may conceive their new taxes.

The Governor spent the entire day, until he left for a dinner in Washington, with his advisers in drafting the bills. In addition, he had two other committees at work on the legislation which he favors.

Jones Heads Committee.

One of these committees is headed by Col. Harry C. Jones, and is to provide for revisions in the State militia laws.

Col. Jones was also head of a committee to recommend changes and report to Gov. Nice. His work now will be to draw up the bills embodying his recommendations. It is understood that one of the changes will separate the office of adjutant general of the militia from the office of ranking line officer. Under former Gov. Ritchie, Brig. Gen. Milton A. Rekord held both posts.

The other committee is drafting measures to make rather technical changes in the workmen's compensation act. In his inaugural address Gov. Nice said he favored repeal of two amendments to the act. One provides that a workman must report a hernia resulting from an accident within 48 hours. The other provides that the original record of the accident must be the basis of an appeal to the industrial accident board.

Of the $10,000,000 needed by the State, at least $8,000,000 must be provided by new taxes by February 1, if Maryland is to get Federal relief aid of $10,000,000 more. The rest of the sum is necessary to meet a deficit in State finances which will appear October 1. In an effort to reduce this deficit, Gov. Nice has asked all State agencies to reduce their payments from unexpended balances by as nearly 25 per cent as possible.

One Bill Offered So Far.

The number of bills being prepared here by Delegates and Senators promises that the Assembly will get down to work this week for the first time since it met, January 2. The first week's session was devoted to organization, while the inauguration of Gov. Nice was the main event of the second week. Immediately after his inauguration address, in which he asked the Assembly to get down to work at once, the lawmakers adjourned for seven days, instead of the customary six.

Only one bill has been introduced in either house. It was a measure affecting only Baltimore County. It was rushed through in 20 minutes after the session opened and sent to the then Gov. Ritchie for his signature. When he did not sign it the Baltimore County delegation called it back for reconsideration. It is understood that it will be tabled by the delegation.

New Executive Mansion Is Advocated by West

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 15 (AP).—Gov. Nice would serve the State well if he had the executive mansion torn down and a modern residence erected in its stead, Harold E. West, chairman of the public service commission, believes.

"Of course he would probably be criticized and sneered at, but nevertheless it would be a fine thing to do, and if it should be done, the trite and commonplace designation 'executive mansion' could be abandoned and the old and dignified Governor's house, by which the official home of the early governors was known, could be restored officially as its name," West said.

West's contribution to the controversy over the condition of the governor's residence was offered last night after it became known that some $25,000 of the $50,000 the Governor has asked for renovation purposes is available from the State treasury.

"Instead of spending any considerable amount of money on it, I think that it would be better to tear the whole thing down and erect in its place a comfortable, convenient, dignified and spacious home for our Governor, in keeping with the colonial buildings and atmosphere of Annapolis, an atmosphere with which the very names of the streets are redolent," West said.

Bryan Davis Loses Plea For New Trial in Theft

Former Treasurer of Takoma Park, Sentenced to 6 Years for Embezzlement, Denied Rehearing in Opinion by Chief Judge Bond.

Annapolis, Jan. 15 (AP).—Bryan Davis, convicted of embezzlement while treasurer of the town of Takoma Park and sentenced to six years in the Maryland Penitentiary, today lost his plea for a new trial in the court of appeals.

The court, in an opinion by Chief Judge Carroll T. Bond, affirmed the decree of the Montgomery County Circuit Court. Davis was indicted by the Montgomery County grand jury November 22, 1932, for embezzling $12,809.66.

The appeal was based on the propriety of statements made to the jury by the State's attorney during the trial and the refusal of the presiding judge to give a corrective instruction.

Judge Bond held that the State's attorney appeared to have been arguing to the jury only the natural probative force of evidence, and pointed out that the jury is the judge, even of the legal effect of evidence, under the Maryland constitution.

"It was to the proper tribunal that the arguments were being presented, and there is no appeal to this court on questions of correctness of the arguments," the opinion continued. "The trial court might, in its discretion, have given an advisory instruction on the requirements of proof, but it was not required to do so.

"It was for the jury and not the court to determine whether the corpus delicti had been established. The jury, and not the court, were to determine the weight of evidence and they were to apply it to the law as they interpreted it, and, as a result thereof, determine the innocence or guilt of the traverser.

"In the event of an error or abuse in the exercise of that power by the jury the traverser's remedy was by application to the court for a new trial."

Suicide Rate's Fall Held Sign Of Prosperity

Washington County Had 9 Last Year; Births and Deaths Fewer.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—A decreasing suicide rate in Washington County in 1934 over the two preceding years is another sign of returning prosperity here, in the opinion of Dr. W. Ross Cameron, health officer, who today submitted his annual report to the county commissioners.

In 1932 there were 14 suicides here; in 1933 there were 21, and last year only nine.

History has shown, the health officer said, that there is always an increase in suicides during periods of depression.

The birth rate, which in times of depression likewise is usually lower, however, is showing a gradual decline, dropping in 1934 to 1,176, while in 1933 it was 1,219, in 1932, 1,311, and in 1931, 1,338.

But there has been a gradual decline in the death rate here, dropping from 802 in 1931 to 752 in 1934. There were 817 deaths in 1932 and 797 in 1933.

Births in this county however, are ahead of the State average, while the death rate is lower.

One of the greatest declines in contagious diseases is that of diphtheria, there being only 45 cases last year against 169 the previous year. This is attributed in part to the immunization campaign conducted by the health department in conjunction with the Washington County Medical Society. "Approximately 10,000 children of school and pre-school age were immunized during the campaign.

There has been a noticeable decrease in both cases and deaths of communicable diseases during 1934, the report shows.

'Unloaded' Gun Menace Shown By Md. Judge

Insley Tells Grand Jury to Probe Fatal Shooting by Club Hostess.

Cambridge, Md., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—The promiscuous use of firearms by persons who do not know they are loaded was branded as inexcusable by Judge T. Sangston Insley, in his opening remarks before the grand jury, which reconvened yesterday to investigate four homicides and the cases of 50 persons incarcerated in the Cambridge jail.

Judge Insley referred specifically to the recent tragedy at the Sandy Hill Country Club, where James Murphy, son of A. William Murphy, of Secretary, former member of the Maryland House of Delegates, was said to have been killed accidentally by a bullet from a pistol in the hands of Mrs. Melvina Rose, hostess at the place. Mrs. Rose was exonerated by a coroner's jury. Judge Insley made it clear that because she had been given her freedom by a coroner's jury, it did not absolve the grand jury from making further inquiry. Continuing, he said:

"It is not necessary that there should be criminal intent. Persons using deadly weapons are responsible for their use, especially in a public place, where greater care should be exercised. Offenders can not escape all liability because they did not know the gun was loaded."

The jury was charged to make a rigid investigation into the case in order that the taking of a life may not be passed by idly.

"This is a law-abiding community," the judge said, "and the rights of the people shall be protected."

This is the first time since his election in November, that Judge Insley has addressed the grand jury.

The Warner Bros. Are Bringing in "Three Men on a Horse" of Another Color!

Stage Play at National Next Week Is Theirs

Not First Stage Attempt; A Critic on Broadway; Theater Jottings.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

As is pretty generally known by now, it is the Warner Brothers, those indefatigable entrepreneurs of the gelatin drama, who really are the sponsors of "Three Men on a Horse," the new comedy coming to the National Theater next Monday night, as successor to this week's "On to Fortune." They entertain some hope, I take it, that there may be something prophetic in the title chosen by Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Langner for their current work!

"Three Men on a Horse" is described by those who have been privileged to peruse the script as an hilariously funny treatment of the idea of a greeting-card writer on the loose at a race track, where he finds it practically impossible to pick anything but winners.

The play was written by John Cecil Holm and George Abbott and is being directed by Mr. Abbott, who, incidentally, is no tyro at this sort of thing.

"What's in a Name?"

Now then, the point of these rambling remarks is largely this: The authors of "Three Men on a Horse," as well as Alex Yokel, the producer, are said not to be entirely captivated by the title they have chosen for their charade and, therefore, are amenable to suggestions for its improvement.

This is an item that might be worth mulling over in the mind, if any, against the coming to town today of Mr. Yokel, who will bivouac in the Warner offices, in the Earle Theater Building, until his comical opus gets going in Panjandrum Cochran's E street opera house.

After I have held converse with Mr. Yokel on this specific topic this afternoon—probably during the screening of Paul Muni's "Bordertown" today at 2—I shall probably have something a little more definite to say on the subject.

And it may be worth your while to read it

Speaking of distinguished producers, playwrights and the like, in Washington to oversee the launching of a new theatrical property, the National is alive with personalities of note. On Sunday there arrived in the Capital Crosby Gaige, who, with Charles Heidt, is the producer of "On to Fortune," playing its initial metropolitan week at the National; Lawrence Langner and Armina Marshall (Mrs. Langner), the authors, who also wrote "The Pursuit of Happiness;" Anne Grosvenor Ayres, publicist, playwright and producer of note on her own account, and that amiable scrivener, Harry Essex, who didn't arrive here Sunday, but was already on hand to meet the others.

One suspects that all this expert attendance may have had something important to do with the aspects of "On to Fortune" most emphatically dwelt upon in today's critical reviews of the comedy.

Briefs of Broadway's Best.

And if it is critical reviews we are to talk about, there could be no better time than this to quote a portion of an interesting letter just to hand from Dorothea Lewis, Washington actress, playwright, and member of The Post's regular reviewing staff, who finds herself inexplicably in New York taking in all the new plays. Says Miss Lewis at a very late hour of the night, indeed:

Have just come from seeing Katharine Cornell's "Romeo and Juliet" and I couldn't write a review of it—I just couldn't. You would not allow so many superlatives in your columns. So I shall simply say that it is beautiful beyond anticipation and is more than real theatrical history in the making. It is theatrical magic. Miss Cornell's Juliet is, of course, thrilling and terribly moving. I feel as if I had been through the whole Capulet-Montague feud myself.

And I am glad to admit that you were right and I was wrong about Rathbone. He is several hundred times better than I thought he could be, playing a younger Romeo than I thought possible and putting his usual sleek sophistication behind him. However, I still think it is strange casting. The vitality, humor and grace of Brian Aherne's Mercutio are the most exciting things about the whole production.

And, oh, the colors! the colors!! the colors!!! And, oh, such costumes!

There was a great deal of beauty, too, last night at the Metropolitan, where "Simon Bocanegra" was being sung—beauty of music, setting and costume and very fine acting by Tibbett. They say he sat under a tree on his way home from school one day trying to decide whether to be an actor or a singer. He seems to have decided to be both.

There is grand theater just now at the farthest outpost from Broadway. Down on Fourteenth street that hard-working, valiant Theater Union is playing "Sailors of Cattaro" and it would be worth going many miles farther than Fourteenth street to see.

It is, really, as played by the all-male cast, and very particularly by Tom Powers, one of the finest things I have seen in a long, long time. It is honest and spirited and tragic—and, I think, important because, although it tells of a sailors' revolt in 1918, it is very much of today. Powers is splendid in a very difficult and exhausting emotional role—that of Franz Rasch, leader of the mutiny, which was successful only to fail because he was an idealist as well as a leader and his men were not up to the self-rule he wanted to give them.

Abandons the "Mike" for Miming

While Roy Atwell in this particular portrait study—or perhaps it is not so very particular—is having one of his characteristically disturbing experiences with the King's and Queen's English over the air, he experiences no such keen harassment in the execution of his costellor role in "On to Fortune," the new comedy by Lawrence Langner and Armina Marshall that opened in the National Theater last night. Further remarks on this subject will be found elsewhere on this page.

Will see "Personal Appearance" tomorow and Leslie Howard on Monday—then home.

Miss Lewis is the most assiduous theatergoer I know in the advantageous apportionment of her Broadway playtime. We are glad to reproduce her opinions of plays many Washingtonians already have seen, because usually they are eminently sound and always intelligent.

Reverting briefly to Katharine Cornell's production of "Romeo and Juliet," which New York has taken to its heart, when Edith Evans suddenly had to return to England because of the illness of her husband, Branda Forbes, well remembered for her performance of Wilson, the maid, in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," acted Miss Evans' role of the nurse of Miss Cornell's Juliet on four hours' notice.

Back to Ekaterinaslav.

To go a little further into the history of Vera Gordon, headlining the current vaudeville bill at Loew's Fox, who was referred to here yesterday only as a native of Ekaterinaslav, Russia, Miss Gordon's name in her native tongue was Pagorelski, the Russian equivalent of the Polish name of the great pianist, Paderewski . . . Coming eventually to America, she sang in concerts—Russian, Jewish and German, because she could not sing in English . . . Then the Yiddish stock company on Grand street in New York, where Fannie Hurst saw her in Tolstoi's "Resurrection" and gave her a part in her play, "The Land of the Free," produced in 1917 by William A. Tasty Collation Note.

Bob and Bill, or vice versa, two gifted gentlemen of the sports pages, feted the downtrodden and perpetually famished ladies and gentlemen (sic) of the dramatic desks at their unfque eatery out at 2601 Connecticut avenue last midnight, following the formal service attendant upon the opening of new plays.

The refectory bears the simple and unadorned, but infinitely eloquent, name of "Kaleidoscope."

In the cold, gray dawn of the morning after—or is this late afternoon?—"Kaleidoscope" still seems to be correct!

By Nelson B. Bell.

Something of the desolation of modern banking was revealed on the stage of the National Theater last night in the new three-act comedy by Lawrence Langner and Armina Marshall, a verbose and attenuated exhibit bearing the doubtful title of "On to Fortune."

"On to Fortune," in its present form, seems to these eyes and ears to be an undertaking which might more reasonably be designated by the unkind label of "On to Misfortune," for it seems to me to possess few of the dramaturgic virtues essential to sure salvage on the side of permanent farcical worth.

There are, to be sure, comic episodes and climacteric situations in this extravagant comedy that entitle it to consideration as an eager effort to combine laughability with logic. The laughability is apparent more often than the logic.

In fact, "On to Fortune" gives the impression of having been written to formula, with so many measures for laughter, so many for dramatic effect and so many for whatever extraneous qualities might be dragged in by the heels. It does not ring true; it fails to cement character with credibility and it falls short of achieving any notable end of hilarious highlight.

Probably I Am an Ace.

In this opinion I may be alone, for there were many laughs last night at the lines concocted by Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Langner—adepts at the facile art of placing glib and glamorous speeches in the mouths of artificial, but articulate, people.

"On to Fortune" is thickly populated with characters that create an infallible aura of believability in the face of a totally counterfeit actuality. It takes up where "Gather Ye Rosebuds" left off and that is no place for any modern comedy to begin!

There may be a sufficient number of the bizarre extravagances with which farce frequently adorns itself to impress a measurable mass populace, but as Washington views it, I should say that "On to Fortune" may not be written down among the hits.

There are those in the cast who do admirable work. Indeed, it would be a difficult chore to single out one who does not.

The Leads Do Well.

It would be something less than justice of the sheerest sort to pretend that Ilka Chase, Roy Atwell and Glenn Anders are not players of the first rank. For they are all of that. They turn in excellent personal accounts of themselves, with the possible exception of Mr. Atwell, who does not, as yet, seem to know his lines with that infallible letter-perfect fluency that characterizes the remainder of the ensemble.

Miss Chase does the most that can be done with the material at her command and Glenn Anders adds no little to an acting group that betrays something of strangeness with their present surroundings.

Mary Rogers, daughter of the inimitable Will—who will be in the Capital on Wednesday, I am given to understand; Hugh Rennie and numerous others of note strike individual fire in a vehicle that somehow just seems to me to be not quite explosive.

Josephine Hull, Myron McCormick, Edward Broadley, Ralph Locke, Edward McNamara and Frank Conland complete a cast that lends as much as is possible to a play that sets off too little red-fire at best.

Candlelight concert of the Washington Chamber Music Society at the home of Frank Frost. Participants: Jeno Sevely, Walter de Lillo, Hendrik Essers, Howard Mitchell, Walter Nash and Louis A. Potter. Program: Quintet for strings, Op. 163 (Schubert); Quintet for piano and strings, Op. 81 (Dvorak).

In the subdued light and quietude most conducive to enjoyment of room music, the compositions of Franz Schubert and Antonin Dvorak seemed to have more intimate a message than they would have been able to convey in less calm an atmosphere. For it can not be denied that a concert hall, under the most favorable conditions, intrudes distractions and interruptions disruptive of the moods induced in the auditor.

During this hour's program, one could concentrate without disturbance upon what the composers, long vanished from this plane of existence, were saying in their tonal speech. It was in melancholy vein that Schubert mused, his lyricism smiling only now and then. Perhaps a premonition of his untimely end came to him while he was writing the quintet, since it is one of the many works he penned during the last year of his life in the final flowering of his genius.

The tone of the work is definitely elegiac, and the slow movement has a gravity of almost somber significance. Introspection was not habitual with Schubert, but here he looks inward with concentration, and utterr his secret thoughts. Even the opening allegro is tinged with a vague nostalgia, and only in the finale does he recover his usual optimism.

A strong contrast was provided by the Dvorak quintet, so abounding in vitality. Like all of Dvorak's best music, it is redolent of his homeland and quickened by the folk spirit. Although the dumka, which gives the first movement its name, is a Bohemian lament, the music surges with energy and continually shakes off the brooding sadness which tries to restrain it.

The musicians read the works with sympathy and understanding. While the ensemble was not always completely fused, it had for the most part a firmness that pleased the ear. Longer association of the members will bring about a finer polish in their tonal blending, and eliminate the occasional roughness that now catches the attention.

"THE CURTAIN RISES." The Belasco Art Theater Society presents the comedy in three acts and four scenes by B. M. Kaye. Staged and directed by Arthur Ritchie. Scenery by Charles Squires. Reviewed Monday night by Gerald G. Gross.

Refusing to be disheartened by yawning expanses of empty seats, seven able, but done-wronged-by, players of the Belasco Art Theater Society performed in a three-act comedy entitled "The Curtain Rises" last night.

As usual, the fare and its manner of presentation was eminently satisfactory. And also, as usual, the attendance left much to be desired.

Indeed, if we may be allowed a moment's digression (although we don't consider it a digression), it is the humble opinion of this observer that the stock company which now tenants the Belasco is vastly unappreciated. That is, using the box office as a barometer. The blame lies, we suspect, not with E street competition, nor public indifference, nor anything else except poor exploitation. But this started out to be a review of "The Curtain Rises."

And Now the Play.

Written by one B. M. Kaye, "The Curtain Rises" is a rehash of the Cinderella theme which, surprisingly enough, turns out to be more amusing than you might have suspected. There is the quite plain-looking young woman who yearns to be kissed by someone other than an uncle. Pinned down to cases, she would admit to a strong preference for the redoutable Wilhelm Meissinger, matinee idol of all Vienna, as the one to perpetrate the initial osculatory salute upon her untarnished lips.

Herr Meissinger looks upon her horn-rimmed spectacles, atrocious hat, double-jointed walk and shiny nose and, naturally, wishes her onto his understudy, Franz Kernmann. Mein Herr has to do something, you see, because she is insistent upon taking dramatic lessons. (Love scenes, kissing—catch on?)

Ample Money's Worth.

The inevitable transformation takes place, without benefit of clay packs, and the now beautiful Elsa Karling not only gets kissed but, in the incredibly deft hands of Playwright Kaye, develops into a sufficiently capable actress under Herr Kernmann's tutelage to play Juliet. All this when the offstage Capulet is injured or something in an accident maybe.

Old stuff, sure, but genuinely amusing in the hands of Foster Williams (Meissinger), Helen Kingsley (Elsa), Grandon Rhodes (Kernmann) and Josephine Duval, who is Poldi, the maid. Robert G. Pitkin is somewhat too energetic for a newspaperman, in our estimation. Of course, perhaps in Vienna that's the way they are.

"The Curtain Rises," like its two predecessors, is a bargain at $1 top.

Hollywood

Hollywood, Jan. 14.

THERE is much excitement. The word goes about town. "This afternoon they're shooting that French scene for the 'Folies Bergere.'" This means that they are filming that sequence for the French version in which the gals are to appear with nothing on from the waist up. From the talk, it seems to be a novelty.

I go on the set—strictly for the story, you understand. I am amazed to find a number of your movie heroes, those romantic lovers you adore, also on the set. Suddenly, they have become interested in watching a picture made. It is strange how many actors had business at the United Artists studio that afternoon—and all married men, too.

I learn that the regular dancing chorus of the picture has refused to work in this sequence. They won't pose in the nude. It is amazing to find these Hollywood chorines so modest.

Back on Broadway there wasn't and isn't such modesty. I can remember "Vanities" and night club floor shows in which chorines worked and fought to become the chief nude in the revue. This was a chorus girl's stardom.

Yet here in wild Hollywood girls who are supposed to stop at nothing, balked. Professional models had to be hired to pose for the pretty French postal card version and they demanded and got more money. The chorine is getting $10 a day; the professional model got $15 the day.

The set presents the backstage of the "Folies Bergere," while the show is in action. Maurice Chevalier goes from the audience to visit backstage, and as the camera follows him the audience sees the show on the stage—this tableau of nude girls. The scene is taken over and over again. Wandering about the set, it is easy to distinguish the American girls from the French girls. The American girls wear a little more.

I talk to one of the American chorines. She is greatly amused by the scene. She claims the reason she wouldn't work in the nude scene for the French is because some day she expects to be a star and she wouldn't want pictures like that of herself about. Anyway, that's what she says.

What amuses her most is the number of men—especially the noted actors—who are on the set.

Watching this flicker being made in French and English is interesting. Maurice Chevalier recites his lines in English and later he says the same lines in French. Chevalier plays a love scene, in English, with the glamorous, dark Merle Oberon. Then later he plays the same love scene, saying the same words in French to a tall blonde, Princess Paley. Miss Oberon will be his sweetheart in America and the Princess Paley in France.

Although these two ladies, Merle and the Princess, are lovely to look at, the visiting actors did not stay to watch. They had seen what they wanted to of picture making.

At Warner's they are now filming Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream." The woodland setting is so large that it covers the entire stage and rambles past the door with the "positively no visitors allowed" sign and on into one of the studio streets.

Max Reinhardt, who presented this play here, and many times abroad, is directing. It is Reinhardt's first American flicker and since the camera is important, he has a co-director, William Dieterle. Dieterle is a former German actor who once worked in a small role in a Reinhardt troupe.

James Cagney, as Bottom, is ready to play a scene. Reinhardt gives his directions in German. Usually a translator tells the actor in English what Reinhardt has said. It is not necessary this time, for Cagney understands German and answers in that language. Dieterle also gives directions, many of which are sprayed with his own brand of peculiar English, for he talks with an accent and when excited delivers some funny expressions.

The entire stock company of Warner comics have been drafted as Shakespearean actors and they were having great fun. It is something of a lark to them. Only the other day Frank McHugh was informed that he is to play the role of Quince.

"Go grow a beard," McHugh was instructed, "and be ready to work in three days." He was strolling about the woodland set very happy. "I raised my beard in two days and was ready to act," said McHugh. "I always knew I had a special talent for Shakespeare."

By Morgan Baker.

OPTIMISM for the future of the merit system was expressed by Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillin, Civil Service commissioner, in an address last night in commemoration of the fifty-second anniversary today of the passage of the civil service law.

BAKER.

"Most" of the emergency agencies will be placed under Civil Service by Congress, Mrs. McMillin is certain.

"Serious inroads" on the merit system were flatly denied by the Government personnel expert, declaring:

"There has been a good deal of talk about serious inroads having been made in the ranks of the competitive classified service under the present Administration. That is not true. The figures do not bear out these assertions.

"The fact is that in the past year and a half the positions brought within the competitive classified service by Executive orders outnumber by more than 6,000 the comparatively few which have been taken out of the competitive class."

Mrs. McMillin pointed out that in the last annual report of the commission it was recommended that the newly created agencies be brought within the scope of the Civil Service law and rules.

This address was made under auspices of the American Federation of Government Employes, sponsors of the observance of National Civil Service Week.

2 Duckhunters Still Missing

Searchers Unable to Find Bodies After All-Day Drag of Creek.

La Plata, Md., Jan. 15 (AP).—The harbor rescue squad of the Washington police and local volunteers today were unable to locate the bodies of two duck hunters who disappeared Friday night in Chicamuxen Creek.

The Washington police boat returned to its dock tonight, but left behind six drags to be used by local citizens, who plan to continue the hunt for the bodies tomorrow.

Charles Vesper, 42, of Bradbury Heights, and Mortie Groves, 20, of La Plata and Washington, were believed drowned in the creek while they were hunting for ducks. A gun was found Saturday in their blind, their boat was discovered near the shore, their decoys still bobbing on the water and their hats on opposite shores.

Slush ice, formed on the water by freezing temperature during the day, hampered the work of the searchers. They tried to use a 300-foot drag line, pulled by two boats, but the scheme was abandoned because the hooks were caught in sunken logs and rocks.

Wasp Streak Is Stopped By G. W.

Oratory of Visitors' Coach Futile in 35-28 Battle.

Roberts Again Is Ace of Scorers, but Team's Record Is Marred.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

EMORY AND HENRY'S slow, dignified method of playing basket ball met up with George Washington's conglomeration of whirling, passing, sliding and shooting last night in the H street gym, and the impact smashed the Wasps' winning streak of eight games. G. W. won, 35-28.

Easily the most exciting game manufactured by the workers of the local basket ball union this season, the game developed into a test of court skill and oratorical ability. George Washington was the most skillful and the officials proved to be the most eloquent despite serious competition from Pedie Jackson, Wasp coach, who disliked the officiating.

Jackson puffed himself up to his full 5 feet 6 inches early in the first period after Referee Maurice Enright had awarded Capt. Jim Howell of G. W. a free toss, and shouted:

"Give 'im another."

Enright did.

"Why'ntcha give 'im another," bellowed the ruffled Jackson.

Enright couldn't see any objection to this and he acquiesced.

Coach Is Silenced.

Still a third time Jackson pleaded for another shot for the Colonial captain, but when Enright served notice that he was willing to stand there all night and pass out the free shots the visitors' coach withdrew from further competition.

Glen Roberts, Emory and Henry's tall, smooth center, whose scoring eye is the deadliest to fall upon a basket in Washington this season, romped off with scoring honors just as he did against Catholic U. the night before, ringing in five field goals and as many fouls for 15 points.

But Roberts was handicaped midway in the final period when two of his ablest assistants, Fielder and Propps, were ejected from the court via the four fouls route. They left with Emory and Henry leading, 25-22, and without htem the Virginians' lead melted like ice in the Sahara.

Kiesel, Berg Lost.

George Washington lost Hal Kiesel and "Moe" Berg in the same fashion later in the period, but it failed to daunt the Colonials and they came roaring down the home stretch to victory.

The downtown school boasted a 17-14 lead at the intermission, converted by Jim Howell, but Fulk thanks to the three technical fouls and Roberts sank field goals as the final period got under way to tie it up at 20-all. Goals by Fulk and Propps and Roberts' foul gave the visitors a 25-20 lead before Kiesel came through with G. W.'s first floor goal of the period.

Noonan followed up his own erratic pot-shot with a snowbird and Ben Goldfadden sank a foul to tie it up again for G. W. at 25-all. Then Leemans, Noonan and Goldfadden pocketed field goals to give the Colonials a 33-25 lead and the victory.

Howell's double-decker, and a foul by Roberts, followed by a field goal concluded the evening's scoring.

State Seeking Grid Profits In Georgia

Bill Would Place Sum of $150,000 in Generla Operating Fund.

ATLANTA, Jan. 15 (U.P.).—Part of the money paid for tickets by those who see Georgia Tech and University of Georgia football games next fall may go to pay the salary of the art appreciation teacher at the Georgia State College for Women.

This interesting possibility was revealed today in a bill introduced at Gov. Eugene Talmadge's request in the new Georgia Legislature.

The bill would carry out the long-cherished dream of State politicians to get their hands on the approximately $150,000 collected from football fans each year by the two main units of the university system—the State University at Athens and the School of Technology at Atlanta.

It would require that all receipts of the university system units—athletic gate receipts, student fees, etc.—go into the general fund for operation of the entire system.

The plan presents a distinct danger to the athletic programs of the two principal institutions, their officials recognize.

Under the present system the athletic associations at the colleges have complete control over their finances. The money from football goes to build and maintain adequate stadiums and equipment for that game, and in addition supports tennis, baseball, basket ball, track and other nonprofitable sports.

Cavaliers Bow To Carolina, 38 to 20

Phantoms Run Up Lead of 11 Points at Start of Court Duel.

CHAPEL POINT, N. C., Jan. 15 (AP).—Rolling up 11 points before Virginia could find the net, the speedy White Phantoms of the University of North Carolina tonight overwhelmed the Cavaliers, 38 to 20.

Nelson, Carolina forward, played an outstanding game, accouting for 13 points. He made 7 out of 7 free shots good, 6 of them in a row in the first half. Harris was eliminated from the game because of an excessive number of personal fouls.

Rogers and Zeisburg played a good game for the Virginians.

Stoefen Bests Bill Tilden in Delivery

131.4 Mile-an-Hour Speed Is Recorded by Device; Vines Is Second.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 15 (AP).—Ever since Bill Tilden entered his fortieth year four years ago, his delivery began to lose its whizz, and in his place Lester (Little Rollo) Stoefen, the tow-headed Californian, has risen as the "speed demon" service ace, bettering the efforts of any of America's four leading professional tennis players.

Facts and figures concerning the delivery of Tilden, Stoefen, Ellsworth Vines and George Lott were compiled by Dr. J. F. Strawinski, statistician, with a special timing device when the four appeared here recently on their cross country tour. From his findings, Dr. Strawinski determined:

Stoefen had the swiftest service, a delivery that traveled 193 feet a second, 131.4 miles an hour.

Vines was second, at 191 feet a second and 130.2 miles an hour.

Tilden came next, with 189 feet a second and 128.4 miles an hour.

Lott's limit is 159 feet a second and 108 miles an hour.

But neither Stoefen nor Vines, with all their present speed, would have been a match for Big Bill as late as four years ago, when he hammered his service across the net at 222 feet a second—a service smash that traveled 151.2 miles an hour.

Ed George Offers To Meet Any Foe

An agreement to oppose any outstanding matman selected for him at the Washington Auditorium on Thursday night, January 24, yesterday was forwarded Promoter Joe Turner's office by Ed (Don) George, co-claimant of the world's heavyweight championship.

A sensation here following his recent victory over George Zaharias and eager to make the most of his popularity, George specifies only that his opponet be one of the best.

Immediately upon receipt of George's offer, overtures for the services of Dick Shikat, Gino Garibaldi and Everett Marshall, among others, were launched. Of the lot Marshall appears best qualified, the blonde westerner having wrestled George to a two-hour draw here last summer.

Ross Barred; Must Fight Ambers

Action in N. Y. Follows His Failure to Defend Lightweight Title.

Morgan, McOwen Come to Blows Over Rumor of 'Bought Bouts.'

By Edward J. Neil.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15 (AP).—The New York State Athletic Commission decided today that Barney Ross, lightweight champion, can't fight here until he defends his title against Lou Ambers, youthful aspirant from Herkimer, N. Y.

This made it unanimous, inasmuch as Ross decided some time ago that he wouldn't fight here, anyway.

The crisp, bald reason for the commission's action was Ross' failure to defend his lightweight crown within the six months' grace allowed every champion. As a matter of fact, Barney hasn't defended his title in 16 months; not since he whipped Tony Canzoneri here in September of 1933. After waiting ten months beyond the specified limit, the commission lost its patience.

Will Suspend Klick.

"Ross is suspended until such time as he signs articles of agreement for a match with Ambers," announced Gen. John J. Phelan, chairman of the board. "Furthermore, we will also suspend Frankie Klick, of San Francisco, for fighting Ross down in Miami January 24. No boxer licensed here is allowed to have any truck with a suspended boxer."

The commission then paved the way for Ambers to get himself eliminated from the situation by fathering a match in Madison Square Garden on February 15 or 22 between the Herkimer youth, who outpointed Harry Dublinsky, of Chicago, last Friday night, and Sammy Fuller, of Boston, veteran of the lightweight wars.

To Go 15 Rounds.

Fuller and Ambers will fight 15 rounds at the lightweight limit, 135 pounds. The commission did not specify, however, that the winner would be considered the logical challenger for Ross, still voicing their protests to the champion in the name of Ambers.

The meeting was enlivened by a passage at arms between Dumb Dan Morgan, famous fight manager, and Joe McOwen, chief of deputy commissioners, over the still smouldering situation surrounding the referees and judges. Morgan thought McOwen was spreading rumors that he (Morgan) could purchase the decisions of one referee and one judge at any fight for a nominal sum.

Morgan threw a left hook at McOwen, which Commissioner Bill Brown neatly blocked, and McOwen crossed a right to Morgan's bald head. Morgan missed with a long right because there was a table between him and McOwen. The fight stopped when Brown got tired of keeping them apart, walked away and threatened to suspend both for fighting without a license.

Winchester Opens Mat Season Soon

Meets Hagerstown Y.M.C.A. on January 26.

Winchester, Va., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—Winchester Athletic Club's wrestling team will open its season on January 26 against the Hagerstown (Md.) Y. M. C. A. at the Hagerstown "Y."

A match with Washington and Lee High School, of Ballston, will be held on February 3 in Winchester, and other meets are pending with the Washington Boys Club, Woodberry Forest and Augusta Military Academy. Other schools and athletic clubs interested in booking matches with Winchester have been asked to communicate with J. B. Redmond at Winchester.

Polo Shake-up Shoves Down Hitchcock

Smith, Boeseke and Guest Also in 9-Goal List; No 10-Goalers.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15 (AP).—The United States Polo Association today ratified a drastic shake-up in the national handicap list, including the removal of Thomas Hitchcock, jr., the famous internationalist, from the maximum 10-goal rating for the first time in 14 years.

The handicaps of two Western stars, Cecil Smith and Elmer J. Boeseke, jr., who shared the 10-goal honors with Hitchcock in 1934, also were reduced in one of the most sweeping revisions ever made in the ranking list. Smith and Hitchcock, each dropped to nine goals, now share the top with Winston Guest, who was elevated from eight goals on the strength of his sensational play with the victorious East team in last season's East-West matches. Boeseke's handicap has been cut to eight goals.

No Ten-Goal Player.

The association's action leaves the polo world without a single ten-goal player and marks the first time since 1916 that America has not had at least one man with the maximum handicap. This country's high-goal players, however, still dominate the international list. Only one other polo star, the Nawab of Bhopal, an Indian potentate, is rated as high as nine goals.

Although the principal changes have all been forecast, the reduction of Hitchcock's handicap marks a turning point in one of the most colorful careers in American sport. Although not yet 35, Hitchcock has had a 10-goal rating ever since he sprang to fame in the International Cup matches of 1921 against England. For 5 of the 13 years during which he enjoyed top-ranking, he was the only 10-goal player in America. Two serious falls, each resulting in a concussion, cut short Hitchcock's activities in 1933 and 1934. He was unable to play in last year's East-West matches and his competitive future is still in doubt.

May Drop Rivalry.

Although taking no definite action on the subject of renewing the East-West matches, which have featured the last two seasons, the association indicated it favored dropping the intersectional rivalry for at least a year or so, so as to concentrate on making the National Open championship at Meadow Brook the 1935 headline affair.

No challenge is in sight for the International Cup from England, but it is expected a British team will be entered in the open tournament. The Nawab of Bhopal is interested in sponsoring an invasion by a picked India team, but prefers to play a special series of matches rather than to compete in the open.

Carideo's Brother To Leave Missouri

Columbia, Mo., Jan. 15 (AP).—The University of Missouri football squad is to lose another Carideo.

Frank Carideo, former Notre Dame star, resigned as head coach at Missouri recently after a disastrous season.

Today his younger brother, Angelo Carideo, quarter back of the 1934 team, said he would withdraw from the school at the end of the semester and enter an Eastern university, possibly Fordham.

Angelo has two years of eligibility left. He played football as a freshman at Notre Dame.

Thistlethwaite To Be Guest At Banquet

George Little Also to Be Honored at G. W. U. Jan. 28 Fete.

GLENN THISTLETHWAITE, head coach at the University of Richmond, and George Little, director of athletics at Rutgers, will be guests of honor at the annual George Washington U. athletic banquet to be held January 28 at the Lee House.

They were formerly associated at the University of Wisconsin, where Thistlethwaite was head coach of football and Little served as director of Athletics.

George Washington's 1934 gridiron squad will be honored during the festivities, and letters will be awarded members of both varsity and freshmen teams. "Tuffy" Leemans, hard-running half back, also is slated to receive the O. D. K. cup, awarded the most valuable member of the team. Leemans won the trophy last season.

Probably of greater interest to the general public will be the complete 1935 football schedule which will be announced by Jim Pixlee, director of athletics. Pixlee also may have some information concerning Len Walsh's successor, if there is to be one.

The banquet is under the joint sponsorship of the General Alumni Association and athletic department, represented by Quentin Watson and Max Farrington, respectively. Tickets are $1.50. They can be obtained at the alumni office, office of the dean of the medical school, gymnasium and student publications office.

Palo Alto, Calif., Jan. 15 (AP).—When Stanford's poloists ride out to meet intercollegiate and club opponents this spring they'll have Will Rogers, jr., son of the humorist, as their captain.

Young Rogers, who prefers to be known as "Bill," was elected captain yesterday. He plays the No. 2 position.

Ghezzi Defeats Revolta for Golf Title

Jersey Pro Cards 73 to Rival's 75 in Duel at Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 15 (AP).—Victor Ghezzi, of Deal, N. J., won the Los Angeles open golf title today by conquering John Revolta, of Milwaukee, in an 18-hole play-off.

The stalwart Easterner outdrove and outstayed his slight opponent to score a 73 on the soggy, wind-swept course, and win the championship. They were tied yesterday after 72 holes of medal play, with 285 strokes. Revolta needed 75 to get around the difficult par-70 layout today.

No money was involved and only the title was at stake. The two youthful players yesterday decided to split first and second money, which gave each $1,075. They picked up an additional $100 today, splitting the gate receipts.

Revolta in Front.

Revolta started out strong, taking the lead on the first hole when he scored the only birdie of the two cards. He held this advantage at the turn, with a 36, to Ghezzi's 37, but passed up several opportunities to preserve the advantage on the home stretch, taking a 39 against his opponent's 36.

On in two, the Milwaukee professional pitched dead to the pin on the first hole, and sank his putt for the birdie four. Ghezzi 3-putted from 40 feet away to get his par.

Revolta moved into a 2-stroke lead on the fourth, a 175-yard par three hole, when Ghezzi was in trouble with his drive, catching a barranca, and then needed 2 putts. The Easterner got the stroke back on the fifth when he exploded from a trap, dead to the pin and sank a 2-foot putt. Revolta was short with his third and need 2 putts to get down.

Fails on Long Putt.

So they went to the tenth. Here Revolta ran into trouble when his second was on the edge of the trap. He was short with a chip shot to the green, leaving himself a long putt that he couldn't sink. Ghezzi on the other hand, was holed high

Group Ready For Meeting Friday

Banker Is Chief Backer, Says Boston Paper; Red Sox Firm.

Reorganization, With Ousting of Fuchs, May Save Grounds.

BOSTON, Jan. 15 (U.P.).—The Boston Traveler says in a front page story today that a Montreal syndicated headed by Ernest Savard, banker, has decided to bid for the franchise of the homeless Boston Braves, National League League Baseball Club.

The Braves, strapped financially, have given up their lease of Braves Field, being in arrears from a reported $11,000 to $45,000 in rent and taxes. Dog racing is scheduled to replace baseball at Braves Field, and now the Braves have been refused the use of Fenway Park, home of the Boston Red Sox.

Move to Montreal.

The traveler says the Savard interests will move the Braves to them.

Montreal if successful in purchasing

The Montreal sportsmen will probably have a representative at the special National League meeting on the Braves plight, called in New York for Friday by President Ford Frick, says the newspaper. A definite offer may be made to President Emil Fuchs of the Braves at that time, the traveler adds.

It quotes Savard as saying by telephone that he and his associates "always have wanted a big league franchise in Montreal," and that they are confident of making big league baseball popular in the Canadian city.

Braves' Plight Threatens 7-Club League

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—Club owners of the National League, called into special session here Friday by President Ford C. Frick, either must find some means of recovering the use of Braves Field for the financially harassed Boston Club, meanwhile barring its use for dog racing, or else face the alternative of operating a seven-club circuit this year.

Any last, lingering prospect of moving the Boston Nationals into Fenway Park, home of the rival Red Sox, was dispelled today by Thomas A. Yawkey, millionaire owner of the American League club.

Want No Other Tenant.

"I have rejected the idea of having the Braves use Fenway Park for several reasons, but chiefly because I desire to make it exclusively the home of the Red Sox," Yawkey said. "We have built the team and we rebuilt the park. We do not want any other tenant."

Apparently the main hope of keeping the Braves in the league, in which they are a charter member, lies in the fact the owners of Braves field have not yet closed the deal for rental of the park to the Boston Kennel Club. The ball club has had notice of its eviction for nonpayment of rental and the dog track license has been applied for, but it remains possible to reorganize the Braves and try, in effect, to save the old homestead.

Retirement of Fuchs Seen.

It appears likely that any reorganization will mean the retirement of Emil E. Fuchs as president of the Braves. Hard hit by financial reverses, Fuchs has made a courageous fight to protect his interests and keep control of the ball club, but it is not believed he can survive the latest set-back. Financially, the Braves have been pretty much in the hands of Charles F. Adams for some time. His son, Weston Adams, is vice president.

Speculation is still rife as to the possibility of reorganizing the Braves with some noteworthy figure, such as Babe Ruth, as playing manager. Adams discussed this possibility with Col. Jacob Ruppert, owner of the New York Yankees, but it has gone no further than that. It is generally believed now that Ruppert wants Ruth for at least one more year.

Blacksburg, Va., Jan. 15 (AP).—Virginia Tech took two basket ball victories from Roanoke College here tonight. The V. P. I. varsity won, 29 to 17, following a freshman triumph of 37 to 22.

During a scrimmage under the goal in the last half, Day, diminutive Tech forward, was knocked unconscious and had to be carried from the floor. He was revived within a few minutes and is expected to play against Richmond Thursday.

U. of Va. Mascot World's Most Educated Dog; Back From Georgia, After 'Theft,' With Ph.D.

Beta Once 'Stolen,' but Is Returned in Exchange for Watch.

Can Spot a 'Schoolmate' Without Ado; in Fact, Has Done It.

By Bill McCormick.

BETA is the best educated dog in the world.

Beta, in case you don't already know it, is a lop-eared phlegmatic canine which is unofficially official and officially unofficial mascot at the University of Virginia. Beta sometimes is called Aristotle or Opium, depending on whether the caller attributes his detached manner to scholarly introspectiveness or dopiness.

Beta, or Aristotle, or Opium, or whatever you choose to call him, is the best educated dog in the world because he recently climaxed an education at the University of Virginia, where he matriculated for many years, with a postgraduate course at the University of Georgia Law School.

Beta's postgraduate course started last spring, when Rodney Cohen, a graduate of Virginia who was studying at the Georgia Law School in Atlanta, came back to Charlottesville for Easter vacation. Just before leaving, it occurred to Cohen that Beta might prove a very valuable asset to Georgia. He grabbed the pooch from under the noses of a group of students, but not before one of the undergraduates had managed to grab his watch—a highly treasured heirloom. Cohen made way with the dog and the students retained the heirloom.

Last Christmas, two faculty members, George Eager, of the law school, and Henry Cumming, instructor in French, went to Augusta, Ga., for their holiday. There they encountered Cohen, who lives in Augusta.

"Look, fellers," he explained, "I'm catching Merry Ned at home for losing that watch. Tell you what, you get back my watch and you can have Beta."

The exchange was negotiated and Beta returned to the Virginia campus.

Beta's sagacity, knowledge and general eruditeness partly are native and partly the result of his education. His greatest feat is always recognizing Virginia students, no matter where he meets them.

Before his transfer to Georgia Beta was taken to all football games played by the Cavaliers. Once he was taken to Columbus, Ohio, for

Bethesda Opposes Silver Spring Five

Contest Looms as Runaway for Lelanders.

The Bethesda-Silver Spring court contest, annually a feature of the suburban court season, is scheduled today on the Lelanders' court, but a 5-year precedent is threatened as the contest looms as a runaway for the hosts.

For five years now this annual battle has been decided by two or less points.

The Kupkans have a record of seven victories in eight starts this year and are second to Rockville in the county league, having played one less contest. Silver Spring is in third place with two victories and a loss but has dropped 5 games out of 11.

Both teams suffered from graduation since their memorable 17-16 battle last year, but the Takomans were further weakened by the marriage of their star forward, Johnny Fitzgerald.

Gondolier Would Be Champion But for This: He Couldn't Sing

By Paul Gallico.

VENICE, Jan. 8 (By Mail).—I engaged one Pietro to pole me around the canals of Venice for a spell and found that for three years he held the single-oar gondola championship of the grand canal, and while his brother, Arturo, lived, for five years they held the pair-oar gondola championship of Venice. It developed later in Pietro's story that Arturo lamentably was a sleep-walker. One night he sleep-walked out the front door of their little home. He could not swim. Pietro never found another sweep like poor Arturo, and so confined himself to single-oar work.

When I asked Pietro why in Venice they pushed instead of pulled, his answer was so simple as to stop all arguments, pro and con. "Poosha," said Pietro, "see where you go. Pull-a, no see." Rowing in Venice is purely practical and utilitarian, and yet this method has great social possibilities that I feel are neglected at home. When I return to America I shall take immediate steps to begin a campaign to change our method of pulling eight-oared shells and singles and pair and four-oars into pushing them.

My memory carried me back to the days when, pulling a sweep in the Columbia eight, I usually had to buy a paper the next day to read about the race. At the starting gun we would leap off the mark with our opponents, row alongside them for perhaps 30 or 40 strokes, and then gradually they would pull away and that would be the last I would see of them until we crossed the finish line. So much for pulling.

Had we been pushing I would have been able to see some of those thrilling finish duels between Navy and California, or Navy and Wash-

Cathop, Away From Races Since November, Wins to Pay $44

Frederick 2d By Nose in Feature

Malley and Steffen Are Grounded by Stewards at Tropical Park.

TROPICAL PARK, Fla., Jan. 15 (AP).—An all-claiming card was offered here today, with the fifth event, a dash of 5½ furlongs for 4-year-olds and upward, serving as the most interesting contest. Long shots prevailed in this instance. The Strathmore Stable's Cathop, away from the races since early last November at Narragansett, startled form students by taking a nose decision and paying his backers $44 straight.

Another outsider, the Amalgamated Stable's Frederick, was next in line, a half-length before J. E. Smallman's Quickly. Desert Call, the favorite, weakened badly and finished sixth after vying for the lead into the last furlong. The time was 1:05 1-5.

Lacks Early Foot.

Cathop lacked early foot and had only two of the eight starters headed in the first quarter-mile. Desert Call, Ding Bin, Fredwa Rick and Quickly Ran bunched in the order named. Charlie Corbett steered Cathop through the bunch turning for home and his mount displayed rare courage in the drive to the wire. The son of Supremus stumbled a stride before the finish, but the judges saw his nose in front.

Masked Queen and Jockey Eddie Litzenberger proved the winning combination in the opening event. Favorite at $5 for $2, the filly made all her own pace in the one mile test for maidens, 3-year-old and upward, scoring by three lengths over Fan. Lucky Turn was two lengths farther back. Masked Queen shook off Fan before entering the stretch and merely galloped to the wire.

Matar Wins Easily.

One of the hottest tips of the meeting went the way of many others in the second race. Easter Nation showed at 8 to 1 on the approximate odds board at one time, but at race time his odds were posted as 8 to 5. The price didn't matter, for the steed, after a brief flurry of speed, dropped back steadily. Matar, paying $9.90, was an easy winner, coming from close off Sock Dologer's pace to beat the latter by three lengths. Dongy Black, a field horse, was a poor third.

Highest Point, a useful 6-year-old plater, accounted for his second straight purse in the third event. Although a bit tardy to break, the son of Supremus went after the leaders and forged to the front at the head of the stretch. He then drew away and had three lengths to spare over Moane Keala at the finish. Smuggled In was beaten a length for second money. Highest Point paid $14.90.

Malley, Steffen Out.

Jockeys Tommy Malley and Earl Steffen will be out of competition tomorrow, the final day of the meeting. Both were suspended for rough riding. Malley incurred the penalty for his work astride Sock Dologer in today's second race, while Steffen's offense was committed on Little Argo in the fourth race yesterday.

Civil War ran like a favorite should run in winning the fourth dash by four lengths. The Wise Counselor colt made it two in a row, taking the track just after the break and never giving his many backers cause for apprehension.

A lot of money was wagered on the chances of Flowery Lady in the sixth event and the elderly mare filled the bill after a hard struggle. She was a half length in advance of Durga, while Lillian Z. came from far out of it to earn the short end of the purse. Flowery Lady closed at $3.40.

Cousin George, $13.20, beat Big Red by a length in the closing event. Col. Greene was third.

The stewards announced that they will recommend to the State racing commission that the suspensions meted out to Jockeys Malley and Steffen be extended to carry on 10 days.

At the Post . . .

Dear Al: Tropical Park Race Track, Jan. 15.

Providing Bobby Watson rides four winners today he will tie Wayne Wright, the suspended jockey, for the meeting's riding honors. However, there's little chance that he will turn the trick, although he's a nice boy in the saddle. Wright has 20 winners. Bobby's brother, Georgie, leads the apprentices with 12 winners. Eddie Arcaro, who I thought would take the chief honors, had 13 winners before he was forced to idle due to injuries suffered while trying to ride a motorcycle. George Cassidy, of the noted racing family, arrived today to fill his capacity as starter at Hialeah. Jack Dempsey's baby racers will be seen in action at the other track. His colors are flame, white shoulder straps, white and flame cap. All was quiet on the Clocker Mike-Trainer Joe foot-race front today. In fact, they are hardly speaking. However, this might be the calm before the storm. It's getaway day tomorrow. I'd rather see them run around the Hialeah track, anyway. We drew a blank today. Say nothing. BILL.

First race — Glory Greenock comes to the races highly recommended by some fast moves. She is well bred and has as much right to be first to reach the wire as anything in the field. Clapping Jane gave a good account of herself earlier in the meeting and may be close. Banderilla for the show award.

Second race—Energetic Boy has been knocking at the door in recent races and finds a field here that may bow to his kind of speed. Meteoric and Buy Straight are fit and ready and will not be far out of it.

Third race—Broad Meadows is the class of this race. If in fair shape I can't see anything collaring this one. Genteel Lady will have the hustling Mr. Parvin in the saddle and will be dangerous. Idle Flirt to take care of the show award.

Fourth race—Vanda Cerula is one out of Clocker Mike's morning trials book. Will make every post a winning one, according to the No. 1 watch handler. Basquine is also speedy and is the one to beat. May Mack may prove the sleeper of the field.

Fifth race—Sunchance is a standout among these. Has races and trials to recommend him. Cooney is better than rated and will be there if the top one makes mistakes. Languorous has a fighting chance.

Sixth race—Dr. Freeland has shown enough in sprints to warrant a top selection at this route. The veteran isn't what he used to be, but still good enough to be a factor here. Wise Advocate and Infinitate are both sharp horses. Don Guzman, if in shape, would be dangerous.

Seventh race—Merovech, with Lynch to do the riding, will have something to say about the purse distribution here. Flatrock and Repeal appear the best of the others.

Eighth race—Kibitzer pays his way in this kind of field. Possibly he can bring us the long end of a mutuel tomorrow. Noelwood for the place and Lady Macaw for the show. Mike likes the last named.

Synopsis Wins 2d Race Of Career at Alamo

San Antonio, Jan. 15 (AP).—Synopsis, a three-year-old filly making the fourth start of her career, won her second race today when she whipped 10 other platers of the same age in the six-furlong top event at Alamo Downs.

Carrying the silks of Friedberg and Axton, the daughter of Monk's Way, came from off the pace with a surge that carried her across the finish line three lengths in front.

Running the distance in the good time of 1:12 under 109 pounds, Synopsis paid the good odds of $11.80 straight.

Open Claiming Rule Backed By Burch

Capital Trainer Advocates Scale for Selling Races at Miami Meeting.

MIAMI, Jan. 15 (AP).—Sharp restriction of the number of claiming races and marked revision of regulations governing them were urged here today to the National Association of State Racing Commissioners.

Representatives of 12 States participated in the first business meeting of the five-day second annual convention of the association, and they heard recommendations from trainers, breeders and owners.

In addition to the concerted attack upon claiming rules, speakers urged the encouraging of more contests at a mile and a quarter and beyond. The Thoroughbred Club of America presented these recommendations:

"That, if there are to be claiming races, no more than one-third of the number programmed for any day at any track shall be claiming races."

Burch Answers Questions.

Preston M. Burch, of Washington, president of the American Trainers Association, told the convention answers to a questionnaire submitted to members indicated a dearth of races other than claimers for medium class horses.

"It is generally agreed," he said, "we need a Nation-wide claiming rule, and that this must be an open claiming rule, but with the stipulation that a claimed horse shall not be eligible to start in another such race except at an increased claiming price, for a period of not less than 30 racing days.

"Further, that said claiming price to be increased not less than 30 per cent of the price at which the horse was claimed, up to a maximum penalty of $700 increase."

Maj. Louis Arnold Beard, racing manager of the Whitney interests and secretary of the American Breeders Association, said breeders were concerned with the problem of revising the claiming rule to fortify prices and in general to improve the quality of horse racing.

Would Classify Horses.

He favored the handicapper, or a board of handicappers, classifying all horses at the start of meetings, and changing these ratings as horse form materially improved.

The Breeders Association further recommended no horse be entered in a claiming race for more than $2,000, claiming stakes excepted, and no horse shall be entered for less than twice the value of the purse to the winner, again excepting claiming stakes.

A note of warning was voiced by Arthur B. Hancock, of Lexington, Ky., vice president of the American Breeders Association, who protested harmful reaction would set in unless proper control was speedily exercised in the handling of problems raised by the sudden legalization of racing in many States.

Rockville High Wins; Takes Lead in County

Rockville High took the undisputed lead in the Montgomery County League yesterday when it won its sixth straight game, and third county win, trouncing Polesville, 39-to-20, on the loser's court.

The regulars saw little action, a mixture of second and third teams completing the game for the Rocks. Euguene Oschenriter kept up his sensational scoring, getting 15 points. Only two of the hosts were able to score, Cubbit accounting for 14 points, and Daniels, 6.

Eastern vs. Roosevelt, at Tech, 3:30 p. m.

By John R. Vosburgh.

EASTERN High rather unsteadily kept its place atop the interhigh basket ball heap along with Tech yesterday by taking an unconvincing 31-to-24 victory over Western at Roosevelt High, while a dashing, young Central team was storming to a brilliant 45-to-20 triumph over Roosevelt on the Tech floor.

Throwing away points in wholesale lots, Western virtually bestowed the defending champions with their second victory of the season. The Georgetowners missed enough of the simple shots which normally can be conceded baskets to have beaten the Lincoln Parkers by half a dozen points.

Central got away to a mile-a-minute start, taking a 20-6 lead over the Rough Riders in the first half. Roosevelt whittled away at the big lead through the third and fourth quarters persistently and, with four minutes to go, had cut the advantage to 32-23, but the Mount Pleasanters again hit one of their scoring streaks and won going away.

Miss 16 Foul Tries.

Like Western, Roosevelt helped itself to defeat but from the free-shot line instead of the floor. The Riders missed 16 out of 23 foul shots. The consistent failure of the boys to net the gift attempts also clearly ate away at their morale.

Despite its defeat, Western made anything but an unimpressive debut in the series. The Georgetowners were flashing a passing game which riddled the Eastern defense time and again, but the boys were missing the shots when near the basket. They were failing on snowbirds and shots from and inside of the foul vicinity.

To make things easier for the Blue, Western flubbed six out of seven free-shot attempts while Eastern was making good three out of the same number. Sixteen-year-old Joe Hanley, jumping center for Western, was playing rings around Buddy Shaner, not only getting the tap, and working as a key-man of the passing, but finding time to outscore the Eastern lad, 6 points to 2.

Dean Gets 12 Points.

Capt. Lavelle Dean was the chief thorn in the collective sides of the Red five, scoring 12 points, three more than those tallied by flight, little Bob Dodderidge, playing at guard for Western.

Eastern took a 6-0 lead and was ahead, 8-4, at the end of the first quarter. Bill Bucholtz, Dean and Charlie Scheible widened the gap to 18-12 at the half. Western was missing golden scoring opportunities, right and left. Dean, Chick Colley and Gay Edelin increased the lead to 26-14 in the third quarter. A couple more baskets by Dodderidge, and one apiece by Phil Maloney, Tommy Allen and Joe Brennan in the last quarter kept Western well in the running, but it was too late to make up for the flock of shots which had gone astray through the early part of the game.

Charlie Nau, Bill Munhall and Bill Vermillion divided the scoring honors for Central with 14, 13 and 10 points, respectively. Vermillion was all over the floor, as usual, keeping the Rough Riders hurrying their shots and passes.

Leads, 20-6, at Half.

Central led at the end of the first quarter, 11 to 3, and stifled a semblance of a Roosevelt rally in the second period after the Rough Riders had made it 12-6. Roosevelt changed the half-time 20-6 score to 20-10 in the third quarter, but Central again drew away to lead 30-15 going into the final period.

Capt. Dave Donovan, of Roosevelt, came back with a fighting individual rally, however, scoring 7 points in succession and sending the Purple and Gold stands into cheers with the score 31-22 and 4 minutes to play. Central having made but 1 point thus far in the period. The Light Blue team answered the challenge by putting the game on ice, with Nau, Munhall and Vermillion scoring several times in rapid succession.

Banqueted U. S. Coach Perplexing to British

By Gayle Talbot.

LONDON, Jan. 15 (AP).—It may be possible to sympathize with the plight of an American football coach who has salary sliced to $7,500 a year, or even one who has a run-in with a senator, but it's difficult for the average British athletic mentor to share that feeling.

He would feel extremely lucky, in the first place, if he were drawing down even $750 a year, and if some fellow corresponding to a senator in importance ever condescended to bawl him out he probably would cherish it among his fondest memories.

You may gather (and correctly so) that the gentlemen who bear the title of "coach" at England's institutions of learning do not rank very high, either socially or financially.

They do not go around addressing civic clubs—extolling the virtues of a sound body and getting their metaphors mixed—nor do they presume to tell the headmaster (dean to you) that Joe Blinks should receive a passing grade because his trusty toe is needed in Saturday's game.

No Grand Old Man."

There is not a single "grand old man of the campus" in the British Isles. There isn't even a "sage of Sagawash."

The average Briton will tell you that there isn't any such thing as a coach either at Oxford or Cambridge, but he isn't strictly accurate. There is a man the athletes address as "coach," even if they wouldn't dream of sitting at the same dining table with him.

When the tracksters at England's two big universities take their workouts these crisp winter days, a man is on hand to help them find their spiked shoes and vaulting poles, and to instruct them in the art of getting a fast start. He makes himself generally useful, even to giving the star sprinter a brisk rubdown.

He isn't a graduate of the school. Oxford and Cambridge men simply do not take up coaching as a vocation. Possibly he learned to run fast and jump high at an "elementary" school (corresponding, roughly, to an American public school), and just drifted into a job on the Oxford or Cambridge campus.

Captain His Boss.

Even though he becomes a coach, he is not given the title officially, nor does he draw a coach's salary. He is strictly accountable to the team captain. He may direct training and offer advice up to the point where he differs with the captain.

An American Rhodes scholar at Oxford, formerly a star athlete at an American university, still feels a trifle guilty about what happened to the coach after Oxford and Cambridge held their most recent track meet. There was a big dinner for the rival teams, with a pheasant and speeches of mutual admiration. But let our Rhodes boy tell it:

"They gave me the banquet tickets to distribute among our fellows, and I went around the dressing room handing them out. Gosh, I felt like 10 cents when I had to pass up the coach—and me with a whole handful of tickets. I'd almost rather have given him my ticket if they would have let me.

"Anyway, when we got together with the other team to go into the banquet room, the two coaches drifted down to the corner pub for their sandwiches and beer."

D. C. Colleges In 3 Games Today

Georgetown to Visit Navy; Maryland and C. U. to Be Hosts Tonight.

THREE ball games appear on the sports docket today for District teams, one of which will be played on a foreign court.

Georgetown's traveling troupe will be at Annapolis this afternoon for the annual battle with the Middies. Catholic U. entertains Baltimore U. at Brookland tonight, while Maryland will be host to Washington College at Ritchie Coliseum.

Changes in schedule were announced by George Washington and Catholic U. yesterday. The Colonials' game with Geneva, booked for Saturday at Beaver Falls, Pa., has been postponed and will be played February 25 or 26, as the final game on the schedule.

Wake Forest Games Off.

Catholic U's games with Wake Forest, the first of which was to have been played Friday on the Deacons' floor, have been canceled.

Maryland's game with Washington College was originally carded as a warm-up for Friday's battle with North Carolina, but the Terrapins have drawn a tartar this time. The Chestertown quintet is leading the State Conference race, in which Maryland does not compete, and reputedly is one of the best teams developed on the Eastern Sho' in years.

Catholic U. figures to win handily from Baltimore, despite its miserable play against Emory-Henry, but Georgetown will be the underdog against Navy.

Aldie A. C. Victorious Over Warrenton, 29-21

Aldie, Va., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—The Aldie Athletic Club scored a 29-21 victory over the Warrenton Club in a hard-fought basket ball game here last night. The Aldie boys did good floor work and the long shots of Talbert were an outstanding feature. Benner, an old-timer on the Warrenton team, made five of the points for his team.

In a preliminary, the Aldie girls also won over their opponents with a score of 23-18.

Gonzaga Trims G. U. Prep, 37 to 21

Take League Leadership; Substitutes Used Liberally.

GONZAGA HIGH took the leadership in the Private High School Basket Ball League yesterday, trouncing its old rival, Georgetown Prep, 37 to 21, on the Gonzaga court.

Coach Orrel Mitchell's Purple five jumped to a 21-to-6 lead in the first half and the substitutes protected the advantage through the last two periods. Coach Joe Gardner, of the Prep, inserted his reserves liberally, concentrating on development of his squad of green youngsters after enjoying several years as coach of championship teams.

Gonzaga displayed a fast passing and shooting game which marked it as considerably further advanced than it was in its early season performances. It was the Purple's first victory in four starts, having been beaten twice by Roosevelt and once by Western. For the Preps is was the fifth defeat in six games.

Hanley Gets 12 Points.

Hanley and Roache, of Gonzaga, tallied 12 and 10 points, respectively, to lead the scoring while Billy Dettweiler, versatile Georgetown Prep athlete, tallied 8 points.

The next league contest is scheduled for Monday, January 28, when the Prep tackles St. John's on St. John's floor. In nonleague contests, Gonzaga faces the strong Bethesda-Chevy Chase five, Friday night at Gonzaga, and Georgetown Prep meets Central at Garrett Park Friday afternoon.

Women Decide To Ease Links Congestion

Will Ask Team Matches Be Played This Year on Two Courses.

By Dave Herman.

DUE to the congestion on the course and the tortoise-like play that resulted last year, an attempt will be made to have all first team matches of the District of Columbia Women's Golf Association played on two separate courses this season.

This was revealed yesterday by Mrs. Charles K. Wing, president of the association, who said she would press her efforts to have the executive committee take such action at its meeting on February 4.

Ever since the team matches between the ten District clubs were inaugurated the women have registered complaints at the slowness with which play has been conducted. With 100 women competing, there have been times, Mrs. Wing pointed out, when the day's matches lasted a good five hours, even though some players were sent off from the first tee and some from the tenth.

Chevy Chase won the 1934 team championship. The team match competition, held once a week for six months, is a highlight of the association's schedule.

This is a pretty "Strong" paragraph. It is about the four Strong brothers—Earle, Glenn, Harry and Jesse—of Beaver Dam Country Club, who will leave with their wives for Miami, Fla., Friday to compete in a couple of tournaments in the Everglades. The Strongs are a golfing family, all of the husbands being capable of breaking 80. They have the strongest golfing family in Washington. The men will play in the Miami-Biltmore amateur championship Tuesday. Seven of the Strongs will leave by auto. The eighth, Jesse, will fly down Tuesday.

Fred V. Grau, of the University of Maryland, will lecture tonight on "Everyday Chemistry" at the meeting of the Mid-Atlantic Association of Greenkeepers at the Manor Club. Chairmen of green committees of the District clubs have been invited. Dinner will be held at 5:30, a business meeting at 6:30 and the lecture will follow.

R. M. Brown has been renamed golf chairman at Beaver Dam and will represent his club at the meeting of the Maryland State Golf Association in Baltimore Friday night.

The women's golf committee of Indian Spring, headed by Mrs. J. Franklin Gross, will give a benefit bridge party at the club at 1:30 today. Notices also were sent out from Congressional Country Club yesterday announcing a benefit tournament fund dance and buffet supper on January 30.

Grid Injuries Fatal to 23 Last Year

13 Deaths Among High School Players; Head Hurts Top List.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15 (U.P.).—Football's death toll in 1934 totaled 23, according to statistics compiled today by Floyd R. Eastwood, of New York University. The compilation was made from reports furnished by the United Press, the Associated Press and individuals.

Football deaths in 1933 totaled 27, four more than last year.

The 1934 deaths weer divided into four classifications: Neighborhood sandlot, independent town team or athletic club, high school and college. The high school class furnished 13 of the fatalities. Four deaths occurred as results of neighborhood play, wtih three each in the high school and college groups.

Cerebral hemorrhage was the chief contributor, with 8 or 34.7 of all fatalities caused thus. Seven deaths were due to internal hemorrhage and seven to spinal-cord laceration.

Kaye Don Sees Record for Campbell

Predicts 300 M.P.H. Mark; Arrives in New York to Recuperate.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15 (U.P.).—Kaye Don, fresh out of jail on the Isle of Man and bearing scars from the wreck that killed his mechanic in a road race trial, arrived in New York tonight to recuperate, and expressed definite opinions on two points.

First, the pale Britisher with the pompadour and stubble of blond mustache is certain his fellow countryman and rival road racer, Sir Malcolm Campbell, will do 300 or better at Daytona Beach, Fla., in February, where Don himself failed to set a straight-away record in 1930.

Then he takes exception to Gar Wood's prediction of 200 miles an hour on water within the next few years. Don says the top will be about 160 in 10 years, "provided we continue to progress."

350 Top Speed Seen.

The Britisher predicts a top speed on land of 350 or better in "say, the next three years—in a small car," not the ponderous monsters of machines such as the silver bullet he drove at Daytona Beach, and Campbell's Bluebird.

The British driver, who twice won the road racing championship abroad, twice challenged for the Harmsworth trophy on water and drove 188 miles an hour in unsuccessful quest of the land speed record held then as now by Campbell, was customarily slow in filling an appointment and arrived a half hour late for a prearranged press conference.

Upon reaching his $50-a-day hotel suite he said he had nothing to say. After that it was a matter of firing questions and trying to catch the replies.

The thrill of fast driving on water is double that on land, he said, but he, sole living exponent of both, really has no preference.

Breezing Along Takes Fair Grounds Feature

New Orleans, Jan. 15 (AP).—With a well-timed stretch run, Breezing Along, in the colors of J. Emery, stepped home in front of a small field of claimers in the one and one-sixteenth-mile race, which served as the feature race at the Fair Grounds today.

Under the guidance of Jockey Young, the four-year-old gelded son of Whiskaway, took command at the head of the stretch and in a drive crossed the line a half-length in front of A. J. Halliwell's Pan Toy. H. G. Shoemaker's Hammel was third.

Hammel set the early pace while Young rated Breezing Along within striking distance. Once his jockey gave the word, however, the Whiskaway gelding took command and then held away to the end. Well supported, he paid 5 to 2 in the mutuels.

Episcopal and W.-L. Fives To Clash

Game Today Is Scheduled at Ballston; Celtics Play Tomorrow.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—Episcopal High and Alexandria High held a lengthy scrimmage this afternoon in the Episcopal gym. Coach Fleming, of Episcopal, was making last-minute efforts to get his squad in presentable condition for tomorrow afternoon's engagement with Washington-Lee High of Ballston.

Coach Fleming, although not naming any starting teams, seemed to favor the following against Washington-Lee: Wilson and Dillard, forwards; Ringer, center, Berkeley and Burke, guards.

Theodore Beach's St. Mary Celtics meet the Trinity M. E. Church quintet tomorrow night in Armory Hall. Johnny Travers' Washington Post Seniors will perform in the preliminary, probably against the Georgetown Boys Club.

Managers of the various teams planning to enter the Senior Basket Ball League will meet in the Gazette Building Thursday night to submit their eligibility lists. Temple, Centrals, Washington Post, A. L. I., O. D. B. C., Demolays, St. Rita's and Del Rays are entered.

Post Team Plays Tonight.

The Washington Post basket ball team of Alexandria will meet the Washington Men's Club at the Armory Hall, Alexandria, tonight at 7:30 o'clock. For games with The Post team call Alexandria 510.

G. U. Frosh End Tech Streak, 36 to 26

Capacity Crowd Watches Daly, Bassin Engage in Brilliant Duel.

CLOSE to 800 leather-lunged basket ball addicts jammed Georgetown University's Ryan Gymnasium to capacity last night to see the Georgetown Freshman hand Tech High's crack five its first defeat of the season, 36 to 26. The big crowd jammed every nook and corner, a number of fans hanging from the rafters. It was the first time the gymnasium had been taxed to the doors in several years.

Meeting the toughest opposition on his schedule, Coach Artie Boyd, of Tech, was forced to keep his five starting regulars in the game throughout. Playing without a substitution, Reds Daly and Andy Farrell, forwards; Long John Billings, center, and Jimmy Roland and Mill Mullitz, guards, carried the battle to the collegians for the rst three quarters, only to falter in the final period when the fast pace began to have its effect.

Daly, Bassin Duel.

The individual duel between Daly, Tech captain, and Harry Bassin, Eastern's former All-High star, matched the team battle for sheer brilliancy. Bassin, thiugh playing forward, as was Daly, was checking the redhead like a machine, but Daly managed to finish all-even with his highly rated rival. Both have been rated as two of the finest players a local school has ever produced.

Despite its nine straight victories, Tech entered the game on the short end of the odds, facing a team hailed as the fastest freshman outfit ever to wear the uniform of a local college.

Golf Pros Set Challenge Match

Houghton, Cunningham to Play Diffenbaugh, Treder Friday.

IN order to enliven an otherwise dull winter season of golf Al Houghton, of Kenwood, has acquired a new playmate, Reds Cunningham, of Burning Tree, and has announced they are ready to challenge the best professional teams in this section.

When word reached George Diffenbaugh and Al Treder yesterday that Houghton and Cunningham were in a challenging mood, the Indian Spring and Manor professionals immediately agreed to a series of matches.

The first has been set for Friday. It will be staged at either Indian Spring or Manor. The champion team will be determined after matches have been held at each of the professional's home course.

It was not until Houghton and Cunningham hurled their defy that Diffenbaugh and Treder revealed that as far back as a month ago they had planned to play together as a team during the 1935 campaign.

Accurate With Irons.

What Houghton lacks in distance off the tee, he makes up in accuracy with his long and short irons. Cunningham is a prodigious driver, and although a bit unorthodox in putting style is one of the steadiest putters in the Middle Atlantic sector. Diffenbaugh and Treder are unusually long with their woods. The Indian Spring pro is a masterful putter, and Treder is deadly with his chips.

Along about March Houghton and Cunningham will attempt to book a series of matches with Bobby Cruickshank, the Wee Scott, and his tall assistant, Darrell Napier, of the Country Club of Virginia in Richmond. They will challenge Denny Shute and Leo Diegel, famous Philadelphia pros; Ralph Beach and Glenn Spencer, of Baltimore, and Craig Wood and Vic Ghezzi, sensational New Jersey pros.

Ducks Elusive, Poor Season Is Ended

Fowl Plentiful, Refuses to Be Lured by Bait Set by Hunters.

CHESTERTOWN, Md., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—One of the poorest seasons on record, in point of wild ducks killed, in the opinion of Eastern Shore sportsmen, closed today. Many visiting hunters from large nearby cities also found little sport since the opening of the wild fowl shooting season in November.

The condition is said to be due not to the scarcity of ducks, since thousands have been feeding in rivers and bays during the entire season. Ducks, however, have found a plentiful supply of wild celery, one of their favorite foods, and other food on the natural feeding grounds and have refused to decoy to the artificially baited shores, keeping well out of gun range.

As a result, hunting clubs and individual shooters in blinds have been out-maneuvered by the quarry, many hunters returning home without the bag limit or with no fowl at all.

In the inland rivers fowl have been feeding on the baited shores at night, retreating during the day to mid-river, out of range. Sportsmen have thus seen hundreds of ducks but could not shoot them.

Geese, on the contrary, provided excellent sport, fields along river courses having been thronged with this type of wildfowl. Some of the finest sport in years has been enjoyed by local shore and visiting sportsmen with the fast-flying gray goose, the majority of shooters getting their bag limit each day out.

on his third and poked in a 6-inch putt to get his par 4.

They moved along on an even basis until the sixteenth. Here Ghezzi topped his drive, but he got a beautiful second, while Revolta smothered his and was far short. His third was 5 feet from the cup, while Ghezzi was 8 feet away. The Deal pro stepped up and promptly smacked the ball in to get his par 4, but the rough, heavy green dealt less kindly with Revolta and he missed his 5-footer.

On the eighteenth, which almost spelled Revolta's doom yesterday, he found himself trapped again today with his second shot. Ghezzi had pulled his tee shot and was short with his second, but a beautiful approach left him an e-foot putt. Revolta blasted out nicely, 10 feet away, and missed his putt by 3 inches. Ghezzi, needing two strokes to win, found no difficulty in taking half that many as he sunk his putt.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 15 (Spl.).—The So-Ath Club basket ball team of this city was defeated by the Blue Ridge Five of Frederick, Md., 35 to 21, here. With P. Roderick and Moore finding the range early, the Blue Ridge quintet rolled up a 20-8 lead at half time.

Moore and P. Roderick tied for high-score honors, each getting 11 points. Beavers was high for the losers with 7.

Varsity Fullback, Flat-Chested Youth Alike, Say College Heads, Seeking to End Recruiting

Group, Blaming Alumni to Appeal to Faculty and Coaches.

ATLANTA, Jan. 15 (U.P.).—Four college presidents sat down in a hotel room here today and decided that a full back is, after all, a student who is entitled to nothing more from his university than the flat-chested youth who is majoring in romance languages.

Furthermore, they decided that the recruiting evil grew to unprecedented proportions in 1934, that the practice must cease of American colleges are to advance as they should, and that the faculty member is the one who suffers most as a result of proselyting.

The college presidents, none of whom hada beard to stroke, were members of the committee on recruiting of the Association of American Colleges, which begins its twenty-first annual meeting here Thursday.

There was no significance in the fact that one of those present was Dr. Albert Britt, president of Knox College, or "dear old Siwash," which does not recruit, and which has not won a football game in years.

The committee members were engaged in the final drafting of their report, which will be submitted to the association proper Friday.

The committee report will suggest that colleges stop the practice of making loans and granting other special privileges to students who happen to be outstanding athletes.

The committee has done no "muckraking," Dr. C. J. Turck, president of Centre College, pointed out, and will make no specific mention of any college in its report, although the committee realizes that some are worse offenders than others.

No 'Muckraking' Meant; Much-Beaten Knox Is Represented.

Dr. Turck admitted that there were some good things to be said for recruitting. One is the fact that it often places a college education within reach of students who would be unable to obtain one otherwise.

"Everybody knows, or should know," he said, "that the alumni groups are more to blame for recruiting than any other parties. And how are we going to prevail upon the alumni groups to stop it? Nobody on this committee has been able to answer that question. All we can do is appeal to college presidents, coaches, athletic directors and other executives directly connected with the college administration."

Wheat Slumps Under Flood Of Liquidation

Cotton Cut $1 Per Bale; General Market Drops 9 to 15 Points.

Chicago, Jan. 15 (AP).—Grain prices collapsed today under a flood of liquidation inspired primarily by fear that Supreme Court decision on the pending case involving constitutionality of gold-clause abrogation might disturb the market structure.

Wheat nose-dived around 4 cents to the lowest point in almost three months as traders dumped holdings in sympathy with acute weakness abroad, particularly at Winnipeg.

Other grains dropped accordingly, corn losing as much as 4 cents, oats 2 cents and rye around 4 cents.

Other Factors Blamed.

Other factors besides uncertainty as to the monetary situation and the break in cotton and stocks exerted pressure on grains. Traders watched the sharp 2-cent dip at Winnipeg intently because the fall of prices there to minimum pegged levels aroused fears that heldging from Canadian sources might occur here.

Liverpool, Rotterdam and other world markets were lower. A decline in foreign exchange also was important marketwise.

New low records for the season were established in July and September wheat, September corn and all rye deliveries. Stop-loss selling filled the pits with offerings after midsession. May and September corn contracts at one time were within ⅛ cent of the maximum loss permitted in one day by trading rules.

Mild Rallies Near Close.

Mild rallies from bottom levels occurred before the final bell, but most contracts closed near the day's low point. Wheat finished 2¾ to 3⅞ cents below Monday's close; May, 95 to 95¼, and corn was 2½ to 4 cents off; May, 84½ to 84⅝. May wheat was 22 cents below the season's high and more than 6 cents below the price a week ago.

Cotton Market

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—A decline of about $1 a bale in cotton today was attributed to nervousness over the gold situation combined with weakness in foreign exchange, stocks and the grain markets. Final prices were a little above the lows, the market closing steady at net declines of 9 to 15 points.

Liquidation became more active as prices worked into new low ground for the movement. Stop orders were uncovered on the break which extended to 12.27 for March and 12.32 for July, making net losses of 14 to 23 points on the active positions.

After their execution pressure subsided and prices rallied partially on trade buying and covering.

Exports today, 16,788, making 2,742,182 so far this season. Port receipts, 16,307. United States port stocks, 2,953,337.

New York Circles Consider Seriously Possible Repercussions of Return to Former Gold Content of Dollar if Government Loses Case.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

New York, Jan. 15.—Financial business circles, for the first time, considered seriously today possible repercussions of a return to the former gold content of the dollar in the event that the Supreme Court decides the pending gold-clause cases against the Government.

As far as the debtor-creditor relationship is concerned, such a course would doubtless have a number of advantages as compared with an alternative of an automatic increase of 69 per cent in all debts which contain a gold clause. On the other hand, a return to the former gold content of the dollar would bring about a corresponding decline in foreign exchanges, the French franc going back to its former parity of 3.92 cents; the Dutch guilder to 40.2 cents, etc. Such a development would have a profound depressing influence on the prices of those commodities that enjoy international markets.

Thus, the price of cotton, which is now somewhat below 12 cents a pound in this country, would tend to decline about 40 per cent to the neighborhood of 7 cents a pound unless the Government intervenes to peg the price. The price of cotton tends to be fixed in the world market. The price in Liverpool, for example, is now about 6 pence per pound. With the pound falling back to a discount of about 40 per cent from the dollar, should we return to the old gold parity, then Liverpool would be the equivalent of a little over 7 cents a pound in terms of the revalued American currency.

Commodities Would Prove Sensitive to Gold Change.

Therefore, commodities that are exported and imported to a large degree, especially the agricultural staples, would prove most sensitive to the effects of a downward valuation of the gold content of the dollar. On the other hand, the great mass of domestic commodities not largely influenced by foreign trade would not be directly affected to any material degree by an increase in the gold content of the dollar. Just as our commodity prices, aside from international staples, reacted in very sluggish fashion to the stimulus of a declining dollar, so they will probably be slow to react to any deflationary stimulus from a rise in the gold and foreign exchange value of the American currency unit.

There would be one great difference, however, between the situation created by the depreciation of the dollar in 1933 and 1934, and that presented by a sudden upward valuation of the dollar, by act of Congress, that is rumored to be under consideration in the event of a Supreme Court decision that gold contracts must be satisfied in the full equivalent of present-day devalued dollars.

The previous depreciation was a slow, gradual affair. Also, world prices tended to decline during the period that the dollar depreciated. Now, however, it is proposed to revalue the dollar upward at one fell swoop, at a time when prices of many commodities are relatively vulnerable because of recent sharp advances and resort to widespread artificial measures to advance prices by Government and private means. Hence, the deflationary effects on the general price level of such a currency measure might be drastic and immediate under prevailing circumstances. Needless to say, prices of many domestic products would be depressed by the decline in quotations of international staples, merely through speculative influences.

Some Brokerage Houses Refuse to Turn Bearish.

Commodity brokerage houses in some cases refusing to take a bearish attitude as regards the future of commodity prices, however, despite the possibility of an adverse decision on the gold clause and a resultant return to the old parity to relieve debtors having gold clause obligations outstanding. The reasons for their optimism are:

1. The sight of declining prices of cotton, wheat and other staples that reflect international prices would greatly strengthen the hands of the inflation bloc in Congress, and lead to new monetary measures designed to offset the effects of dollar revaluation upward.

2. The current flurries of excitement over the effects of an adverse decision may influence the ultimate decision. They bring home forcefully the disruptive practical effects of a defeat for the Government, and thus strengthen the argument that the Administration should be upheld on this occasion in its resort to an emergency measure justified by the general welfare clause of the Constitution.

On the other hand, a return to the old gold content of the dollar would have one effect that would be very pleasing to the conservative banking community. It would cause the Government to return to the Federal Reserve banks the "gold profit" which it took over at the time of devaluation. This would remove the great potential basis for inflationary credit expansion that is furnished by this vast fund of gold, for the time being impounded, but available eventually as a basis for a vast growth in the credit structure of the country which is not needed.

Meanwhile the flurries of excitement in the foreign exchange, commodity and security markets are proving harmful to the cause of business stability. For this reason, intervention late today by the stabilization fund to stop the panic selling of foreign exchanges, caused by unwillingness of the large New York banks to assume the risk of gold shipments under present conditions, was hailed with satisfaction by those whose business requires them to make foreign commitments.

Bond Market Sinks Despite Federal Loans

Corporate Issues Drop 1 to 3 Points; Trading, $13,289,000.

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—The bond market was unsettled by falling equity prices and demoralized foreign exchanges today with secondary corporate loans the hardest hit. U. S. Governments and first grade issues, however, were resistant and generally higher.

The impending decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the gold-clause cases continued to be an important topic of discussion in bond circles.

Price movements indicated buyers and sellers were making adjustments best suited to individual holdings pending the decision.

Federal Issues Higher.

While Federal issues moved higher, along with a majority of prime corporate investments, lower priced loans, which usually follow equities and commodities, were subjected to considerable pressure when European gold currencies developed acute weakness, presumably as the result of fears that the Administration's monetary program would be invalidated.

Losses of 1 to 3 points were shown by a long list of active issues, including Baltimore & Ohio 5s at 71, Bush Terminal 5s at 39, Certainteed 5½s at 72½, Florida East Coast 4½s at 65, Kelly-Springfield 6s at 48½, New York Central 5s at 65, Nickel Plate 5½s at 71, International Telephone 4½s at 69, Southern Pacific 4½s at 66, and Walworth 6s at 45.

The Associated Press average for 20 railroads declined .49 of a point, to 86.10; that for 10 industrials was .45 of a point lower, at 95.15, and for 10 utilities, .26 of a point down, at 85.54.

On Gaining List.

Government obligations selling higher included Liberty 4¼s, up five thirty-seconds, at 103.27; Treasury 4s of 1944, up six thirty-seconds, at 109.23, and Home Owners Loan 2¾s, up ¼ point, at 98.

In the foreign section, Royal Dutch 4s yielded 13½ points, to 105½, following the perpendicular decline on Monday when the Hague Court ruled that dollar bonds of the company could be paid in devalued American currency. French government issues were around 2 points lower in consequence of the weakness of the franc, and German loans declined fractionally. Polish 7s gained 2 points, at 120.

Transfers aggregated $13,289,000, par value, compared with $12,516,000 on Monday.

World Marts Confused Over U. S. Gold Case

Stocks, Bonds and Foreign Money Turn Lower; Fears Tempered.

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—The ghost of the old gold dollar stalked through world markets today spreading confusion.

Related recognition abroad of the possibility of a Supreme Court decision in Washington, which might uphold contracts calling for payments in the old dollar, 69 per cent higher in terms of the yellow metal than the present dollar, tempted speculators and set the dollar skyrocketing in foreign exchange markets of London and Paris.

The movement was quickly taken up in New York, where quotations for foreign currencies in terms of dollars hit the skids and the stock market went into an abrupt decline.

Bonds at Premium.

High-grade bonds containing the abrogated clause to pay in old gold dollars advanced to higher premiums. Grain prices slipped at Chicago. Gold mining shares slumped in New York and Toronto.

The state of nerves showed signs of abating before American markets closed, however, and prices came back somewhat from the extremes of the day.

Leading banking quarters still insisted that they felt reasonably confident that no matter what the Supreme Court decides some legal means would be found to prevent the return of the former American currency unit based on 23.22 grains of pure gold, in contrast to the 13.71 grains of the present dollar.

Another Spell of Jitters.

Nevertheless there was enough uncertainity in financial markets to cause another spell of jitters.

Persons who held balances abroad tried to convert them into dollars, and commercial interests which normally buy foreign currencies stood aside.

Persons who had been holding common stocks, particularly shares in gold and silver mines, and those who had commitments in the commodity markets as "hedges" against further depreciation of the dollar quickly tried to reverse their positions as the saw the dollar rising.

Gossip of New York Markets

By Claude A. Jagger.

New York, Jan 15 (AP).—A froth of rumor and conjecture over currency stabilization has risen again to the surface of the world's simmering financial centers.

A new governor for the Bank of France, a surprising silence on the subject of money in President Roosevelt's message to Congress, a plea by the United States Attorney General that nothing be done to cripple his country in possible stabilization negotiations, a projected visit of the French premier to London next week—what more could the rumor mongers ask?

But the studied opinion in Wall Street foreign exchange circles is that the time is not yet ripe for any definite action. Washington has denied that it is participating in any stabilization negotiations, quieting suggestions that the President's silence on monetary matters might have meant delicate diplomatic discussions were in progress.

Pound Stabilizing Denied.

The British chancellor of the exchequor said just before Christmas there was no "present" intention to stabilize the pound, and insofar as Wall Street experts can see, nothing has happened to change the British position.

There is no doubt in international banking quarters that the French, as leaders of the gold bloc, are anxious to discuss stabilization. They were so anxious to discuss it to the exclusion of everything else at the world economic conference a year and a half ago that the conference disintegrated when the subject was ruled out. Premier Flandin is expected to talk about it when he goes to London next week.

Perhaps, Wall Street experts say, informal discussions may do much at this time, and pave the way for action before the close of the year.

Big Obstacles Remain.

Some big obstacles remain. Chancellor of the Exchequer Chamberlain told the House of Commons last month that nothing could be done until the dollar and the franc were brought into harmony. The British think the franc is too high in relation to the dollar.

Since then, Sir Henry Strakosch, prominent British economist, high in official counsels, has said bluntly the French should devalue. He also pointed to the course of the New Deal in the United States and the confused state of affairs in Germany as needing clarification before world stability could be restored.

Jean Tannery, new head of the Bank of France, is known to be more liberal than his predecessor, but the premier, the finance minister, and M. Tannery, have all insisted that there is no intention to devalue. The thrifty French still remember too poignantly their losses in the drastic devaluation of the franc after the war.

Regarding Sir Henry Strakosch's remarks about the United States and Germany, Wall Street economists express the opinion that the period of drastic change is over in this country, and that comparative stability seems to have returned. As for Germany, biggest industrial country in Europe and vitally important in consideration of world economics, they mostly say it is anybody's guess.

Allowable Gasoline Cut for February

The national gasoline allowance for February was placed at 32,560,000 barrels this week by Oil Administrator Harold L. Ickes, authorizing a decrease for the month as a whole from the 34,750,000 gallons in January, but an increase of 42,000 barrels in the daily production, since February has only 28 days, as compared with January's 31.

The daily average for February will be 1,163,000 barrels, against 1,121,000 in January.

In recommending the allocation, the Bureau of Mines and the Petroleum Administrative Board advised Administrator Ickes that gasoline production in February to meet the demand should be 27,960,000 barrels, with a provision for 4,600,000 barrels to be added to inventories so that working stocks would meet trade requirements.

Stocks Shrink As Dollar Rises On Exchanges

Nearing Gold Decision Blamed; Sales Up to 1,378,910 Shares.

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—The dollar swirled higher in a boiling foreign exchange market today as financial quarters here and abroad again experienced misgivings over the coming Supreme Court decision on the legality of the gold clause.

Stocks, leading grains and commodities, and most secondary bonds responded with sharp setbacks, only partially compensated by modest recoveries at the close.

Gold and silver mining shares were the first and severest sufferers, with losses of from 1 to 4 or 5 points each, while high-priced issues in this group dropped even more. Homestake, at 350, lost 28 points, and was about 10 points worse than that at its lowest.

French Francs Recede.

French francs, the principal gold currency, receded to 6.47½ cents at their low, and closed at 6.56⅛, substantially below the point at which it is profitable to ship gold to the United States from Paris.

The disturbed condition of the market made exchange men cautious, however, and no engagements of metal for import had been made so far as could be learned.

Although declines in leading trading stocks were substantial at times, the list as a whole was not under severe pressure. The Associated Press average for 60 selected stocks declined 1.08 points to 38.46 and the turnover amounted to 1,378,910 shares.

Early Weakness Spreads.

After midday the early weakness in mining shares was communicated to favorites among the industrials and rails. In these divisions losses at the bottom ran from 1 to as much as 4 points, with recoveries toward the finish of mostly fractions to a point.

Santa Fe, Case and Union Pacific each gave up a little more than 3 points each. Others with recessions of from 1 to 2 or a little more, included U. S. Steel, American Tobacco B, Bethlehem Steel, Chrysler, General Motors, Pennsylvania, Sears-Roebuck, International Harvester, Southern Pacific, American Can, du Pont, Pullman, and Monsanto Chemical.

American Telephone was little affected by publication of the preliminary earnings figure for 1934 showing share profits of $5.85, compared with $5.38 in the previous year. The stock closed ⅝ lower at 103⅛.

Italy Plans to Cut Deficit for 1935-36

Rome, Jan. 15 (AP).—A drastic reduction in Italy's national deficit for 1935-36 to a figure almost half that of the current fiscal year was envisaged in the budget approved by the Cabinet today.

The budget contemplated expenses of 19,645,000,000 lire (approximately $1,683,576,500) and receipts of 17,988,000,000 lire (approximately $1,520,461,600). The projected deficit was 1,657,000,000 lire (approximately $142,204,900) as compared with 2,974,000,000 lire (approximately $254,871,800) for the current fiscal year ended June 30.

Expenses under the new budget would be reduced 991,000,000 lire (approximately $84,928,700) with an estimated increase in receipts of 326,000,000 lire (approximately $27,-938,000.)

The Dollar Abroad

(Associated Press.)

Leading foreign monies turned actively weak against the dollar in world foreign exchange markets today.

In London the American unit was strong at 4.87½ to the pound sterling and in New York the pound lost 1¾ cents at $4.87.

A sharp rise occurred in the dollar at Paris where it was quoted at the equivalent of 6.583 cents to the French franc, while the franc in New York lost .04⅛ of a cent at 6.55 cents.

In New York guilders led a sharp decline in other gold bloc currencies at 67.24, cents off .33 of a cent, while Swiss francs lost .18 of a cent at 38.18 cents, and Belgas were .15 of a cent down at 23.23 cents. All leading gold exchanges were substantially below the point at which it is profitable to ship metal from abroad to New York.

Curb's Prices Close Lower; Metals Blamed

Some Issues Stage Rallies; Trading Volume Rises to 250,000 Shares.

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—Selling in metal shares sharply depressed the general curb market today. Losses of around 1 to 3 points prevailed at the close. Volume broadened substantially on the decline.

The market drifted lower in the early dealings but the main decline came in the late afternoon. Offerings dried up toward the close and moderate recoveries appeared in a number of issues.

Among shares yielding 2 to 3 points were Bunker Hill & Sullivan, Great Atlantic & Pacific, Lake Shore, Parker Rust Proof, A. O. Smith and Singer Manufacturing. Utilities were a little more resistant than other sections of the list. Losses of about a point were registered by Hiram Walker, Newmont, Pioneer Gold, Swift International and Pittsburgh Plate Glass.

Transfers, which approximated 250,000 shares, were almost twice as large as the day before.

Insurance Stocks Take New Highs for Week

For the week the aggregate value increased $4,681,000, or 0.95 per cent, the total as of January 11 being $496,386,000.

Sinful Saving.

It's a sin to save your money when the land is full of gents who are needing milk and honey, who are needing 50 cents; they are toiling up the highways, they are roaming on the street, they are camping in the byways and they haven't things to eat. They are short of loaves and fishes, they are short of picayunes, and they have no wholesome dishes, such as tripe and boneless prunes. In the wind their rags are waving, and their beards are long and rank, and we go on saving, saving, putting money in the bank. It's a sin to save the smackers, and to hoard the bright bawbees, when the kids are needing crackers and perhaps a slice of cheese. There are children sorely beaten, in the cities grim and gray, who have had no doughnuts wheaten since two weeks ago today. There are children undernourished, sighing for some beans and peas, in a country that once flourished like the greenest of bay trees. We can hear their plaintive raving as they form a mournful line, and we go on saving, saving, putting kopecks down in brine. There is grief in all directions, there is sorrow everywhere; there is woe in all the sections, there are novelties in care. Everywhere the tears are laving eyes that see no hope or cure, and we keep on saving, saving—let some others help the poor.

STREAMLINED TRAINS ARE NOT NEW!
THE MEIGS RAILWAY OF 1886 WAS NOT ONLY STREAMLINED BUT RAN ON A SINGLE RAIL...

10¢ WORTH OF JUNK REPRESENTS ALL THAT IS LEFT OF A $15,000,000 FORTUNE IN CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY OF THE CIVIL WAR... IT IS STILL BEING HELD BY THE U.S. TREASURY FOR ITS RIGHTFUL OWNERS...
ADRIAN IV WAS THE ONLY ENGLISH POPE IN THE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH...
CHARLES POHLE WAS 4 YEARS OLD ON THE 4TH DAY OF THE WEEK, THE 4TH DAY OF THE MONTH, THE 4TH MONTH OF THE YEAR...
St. Louis, Mo., 4-4-34

Although the Meigs train, illustrated above, whisked around horseshoe curves at 15 to 20 miles an hour—a speed sufficiently fast to awe observers in 1896 — its chief claim to fame lay in the fact that it ran on only one rail, and its drive wheels were horizontal instead of vertical.

The blunt, bottle-shaped cars of the experimental train, however, are strongly suggestive of today's ultra-modern articulated streamline trains.

The strange train rode straddle of a single fencelike rail, the load being borne by slanting wheels which met on the roadbed. The driving wheels were horizontal, and pressed against the upper part of the rail. The train was tried out on an experimental quarter-mile track near Boston, where one reporter who saw it wrote that "the way in which the car was whisked round the curves and up the grades at the rate of nearly 15 to 20 miles an hour was a wonder to the visitors."

A shoebox partly filled with trinkets, mostly coin purses and moldy leather bill folds, kept by the U. S. Treasury Department, is all that is left of a store of valuables once valued at $15,000,000—property seized by Union forces during the Civil War. The property was kept for a time, then all of it that could be identified was returned between 1886 and 1888, after which the rest that had any value was sold at auction.

Elimination Throw-in.

With four honors and the Queen of trump against you a major game contract might seem hopeless. Such is the state of affairs in today's hand. West holds a powerful lot of defense cards. A less astute declarer might easily lose two hearts and two diamonds. By cleverly conserving a reentry in dummy, South gives one of the finest exhibitions of an elimination throw-in.

Today's Hand.

South, Dealer
East-West vulnerable

|---|---|---|---|
| 1♠ | Dbl. | 2♠(1) | Pass |
| 4♠ | Pass | Pass | Pass |

1—A feeble shout-out bid.

The Play.

West opened the club King. Dummy winning. Declarer was embarrassed for choice of how best to utilize his one sure entry to Dummy. Should he start the diamonds at once? Should he take a trump finesse?

The best choice is to forego both of these possibilities! The proper line of play is dictated by the probability that West has at least the Ace and King of hearts and the King of diamonds for the takeout double. Declarer led a club from Dummy and ruffed. Seemingly this play flies in the face of all principle—needless forcing of the long trump hand, abandonment of the opportunity to lead up to tenaces.

South continued with two top trumps, finding the adverse trumps split. A heart lead forced West to jump up with the King.

In order to avoid a second heart throw-in, West cashed the heart Ace at once and exited with a third round of clubs. Now the point of the earlier club ruff is apparent. West has been compelled to assist in stripping out North's clubs and so to pave the way for an "elimination throw-in."

South, in with the club force, laid down the diamond Queen. This card was led because of the strong probability that West held the King; the position of the Jack was uncertain.

Forced back in the lead with the diamond King, West could find no safe exit. A diamond lead would go up to the major tenace. A heart lead, permitting the finesse of the ten, would yield two heart tricks and stuff for both of South's small diamonds. A club lead would enable North to discard a diamond, and South to ruff, thus enabling. Declarer to avoid any further loss in the diamond suit.
